A CALCUTTA Native paper, which must have been disappointed to find that there is anything in the world worse than the British Government, devotes a leading article to the discussion of the question, "Is influenza earthly or heavenly?" Its treatment of the subject is more poetic than scientific, for it leads off with the mysterious preamble:—"As some, at least, if not many, souls are being carried off from earth to heaven, and as several of our friends lately made a journey to the gates of the latter place on the wings of influenza, bringing back physical acquirements that promise to be lasting." The theory that the writer puts forward, however much it may savour of Jules Verne, is not bad for one who has probably failed to connect the goddess Kali with the visitation, and is in search of a more strictly cosmic cause of sneezing and aching bones. The cause of mischief, then, he suggests, is meteoric. It is star dust that does it, and there's an end to the matter. The explanation may not seem to be worth much, but in communicating it the writer gives us doses of eloquence which, if administered at the right time, ought to be a powerful remedy against influenza and much worse things. "Armoured and plated by this circumambient canopy of air, the vessel of the earth sails along more safely than all the floating batteries of Great Britain, and the fiery cannon-balls, shot out from the heavens as soon as they touch our transparent envelope, are caught and consumed and put out, their intense heat turning them into vapours, which, as missiles, lose their effect in falling." Evidently Mr. Percival Spencer did not take his parachute to Calcutta for nothing.

ONCE more, says the Pioneer, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, in reviewing the work done in the Civil Hospitals and Dispensaries of the Province, has to regret the smallness of the contributions given by the Native public to the latter class of institutions. Out of a total of Rs. 24,000 subscribed in 1889 more than two-thirds came from the comparatively small European community.

Now the dispensaries are maintained entirely for the benefit of Natives, and the number of persons attending them amount to over two millions annually. Their popularity is undoubted, and they might be multiplied with advantage, but the funds for their support are not forthcoming. District Boards and Municipal Committees seem somewhat remiss in many districts in the matter of providing medical relief for the people, and they are to be forthwith admonished on this particular point; but the Government can do but little to combat the general apathy of the public. It is certainly a reproach to a Province which is steadily advancing in material prosperity that only Rs. 7,000 per annum should be given to Dispensary funds by the whole Native population.

THE Englishman draws attention to the unsatisfactory condition of the administration of justice in Upper Burma, and says:—"The special provision in Sir David Barbour's budget of five lakhs of rupees is intended in part to meet the expense of improving the judicial service of Upper Burma, and the shape which the reforms will take, provided objections be not raised in the India Office, will be the appointment of a Judicial Commissioner for the whole of the newly-annexed province. At present there are four Judicial Commissioners in the province, each in charge of a province, each independent of the others, and each holding a final court of appeal. There are consequently apt to be four different precedents laid down in cases of the same character, which cannot but cause confusion where traders have business connections all over the country, and where their contracts are in danger of being interpreted one way in one division, and another way in another.

Now that the Chin-Lushai Expedition is, at any rate for the present, at an end, it is as well to look back, says the Allahabad Morning Post, on the cost, in lives, which this little campaign has involved. Our casualties among officers have comprised Major Gordon Cumming, Cheshire Regiment, and Second Lieutenant A. K. Foster, King's Borderers, killed; Major Sewell, Norfolk Regiment, severely wounded, and a number of officers invalided, including Colonel Carleton, Major Storney, and Major Edge. After all, the list, in its serious aspect, is not larger than the return of those, within the same period, who have lost their lives or limbs in the polo field.

THE Mahomedans of Bengal apparently do not intend to be behind their brethren of the Punjab and the North-West in their opposition to the Congress movement. Perceiving that a large number of their co-religionists who read the vernacular papers edited by Bengalee gentlemen are favourably disposed towards the Congress, they have started a Bengalee journal of their own, with the avowed object of presenting to its readers the views held of the movement from the anti-Congress standpoint. The paper, which has already secured a large circulation, is called the Shudakar. It is the property of Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam, Khan Bahadoor, a pleader and vakil of the High Court, and a Municipal Commissioner of Calcutta, and several leading Mahomedans are said to be among its contributors.

MAJOR-GENERAL DASHWOOD is not complimentary to our friend the Babu in a letter he addresses to Vanity Fair, from which we cull the following:—"As to the idea of having 'East Indians' on the Privy Council, if by these Natives are meant, anything more ridiculous than Bengali Baboos in such a position could hardly be conceived. A race of people who are quite unfit to govern anywhere, who were slaves before our arrival, and would be so in the event of our departure; a non-fighting race, as they have more than once informed us; adepts at fraud, intrigue, and chicanery; in stability, originality, and truth altogether wanting! These are the chattering parrots who take in Radical politicians, ignorant of the East, and who have the impudence to pose as the representatives of Native opinion, which, as a fact, among the masses of that country, is non-existent."

WE have received a "Second Memorandum" on the Benares Temples case, signed by Mr. Frederick Pincott, Patron of the Benares Association, which accuses the Indian Government of "unlawful appropriation of charitable trust funds, and refusal to allow investigation." This, as Mr. Pincott puts it, is a grave charge, and he adds:—"The known facts are so clearly against the Indian Government that the onus of proof lies on the Government to establish its right to seize what seems so obviously Temple property, under the assumption that it formed part of Madhava Rao's private estate. Lapse of time cannot condone so great a wrong, more especially as the lapse of time has been entirely caused by the persistent evasion, on the part of the Indian Government itself, of the investigation now again demanded." Perhaps the Indian Government has its own explanation.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 18.

The past week has been singularly devoid of any incidents of interest or importance. The excessive heat seems to have suppressed the energies even of the Congress agitators, and little has been heard of their political campaign in favour of elective institutions. Their opponents, too, appear to have suspended their efforts, but doubtless both parties will resume active work when the rainy season sets in. The Indian Mirror, the principal organ of the Congress party, publishes a long list of petitions condemning Lord Cross's and supporting Mr. Bradlaugh's Bill, which have been sent for presentation to Parliament. The real value of these petitions as expressions of public opinion is, however, greatly diminished by the revelations which have been made regarding the manner in which signatures were obtained. The counter-petition of the Mahomedan Patriotic Association has now reached over 39,000 signatures, and the Central National Mahomedan Association is also sending a largely-signed petition. The other minority communities, although decidedly hostile to election, do not seem to be making any organised effort to represent their views to Parliament; but their organs in the Press, in common with the more moderate Hindoo newspapers, are unsparing in their criticisms on the Congress campaign.

The Government has given way on the question of the taxation of profits on the sale of goods belonging to consignors living outside India. At the meeting of the Supreme Council on Thursday, it was resolved to instruct the income-tax authorities to withdraw their orders and suspend further action pending the receipt of the memorials which the commercial communities of seaport towns are now preparing. The Government has acted wisely, for the feeling on the subject was very strong, not only in Calcutta, but also in Bombay, and might have led to a popular agitation against the income-tax generally which would have been difficult to resist. Indeed, it is not yet certain that some such general agitation may not result from the recent conference of representatives of the principal public associations in Calcutta.

The Government of the North-Western Provinces is about to open relief works in Garhwal, where there appears to be some distress owing to the failure of the early crops. Scarcity is also probable in the adjoining district of Kumaon, but to less extent, although even there some relief may be required. Complaints of want of rain and great heat come from various other parts of the country, but nowhere do the crops as yet seem seriously threatened. During the last few days the sky has been clouded, and a good deal of rain has fallen in lower Bengal. The signs appear to point to an early setting in of the rainy season.

Some ten years ago an effort to improve the condition of the Eurasian community was made by starting agricultural colonies at Whitefield and Sansmond, on the table-land of Mysore, near Bangalore. Mr. Rees, private secretary to the Governor of Madras, has published an interesting account of the visit of Lord Connemara paid these colonies last month. The result of the inspection was not such as to hold out hope of success for the scheme. The climate is good, fruit and cereals could be grown easily, and there is a market at an easy distance, but Lord Connemara found that the crops were sparsely raised, and that the settlements had not a flourishing appearance. The conclusions he came to were that it is improbable that any but capitalists can work these holdings at a profit, that in respect of crops it is unlikely that settlers will ever be able to cope with cultivators, and that the idea of a self-contained European or Eurasian village, possessing its own artisans, tradesmen and agriculturists, independent of all outside help, must be abandoned as altogether chimerical.

The Madras Government has received petitions containing several thousand signatures, praying for the release of the Mohunt, or High Priest of the Tripati Temple, who was lately convicted of misappropriating the temple treasure. The petitions bear the names of many well-known members of the Mussulman and Hindoo communities.

The Government Gazette contains a despatch from the Secretary of State, replying to the recent despatch of the Government of India on the excise question. Lord Cross states that the reply of the Indian Government places a different complexion on the matters mentioned in last year's debate. He accepts the general principles laid down for the guidance of local authorities, and is confident that the Indian Administration is fully as desirous as the House of Commons to prevent the increase of intemperance. Aspersions which he believes to be incorrect have fallen upon the excise arrangements, but he anticipates that the recent discussion will strengthen the position of the Government and its officers in their efforts to restrict the use of liquors and drugs.

BOMBAY, MAY 16.

The Commission ordered by the High Court last month to take evidence in Bhownugger on behalf of Bramacharee, one of the accused in the Bhownugger defamation case, has fallen through, the accused having admitted that he has no evidence to offer.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INCOME TAX PRODUCTIVENESS.

(Madras Mail.)

A little more than half-a lakh of rupees was spent in the Presidency of Bombay during the year 1888-89—according to a Government review just published—on the collection of Income Tax. In Bombay City a Mr. Servai and a special staff are employed on the collection, but in the Mofussil the collection is made by the ordinary revenue establishment, assisted by a few temporary clerks and peons. Some remuneration is allowed to village officers for their co-operation, but the extent of it is not stated. The total collections amounted to Rs. 28,97,489, or say 29 lakhs, plus Rs. 2,99,683 deducted from salaries, and Rs. 1,53,939, deducted from interest on Government Securities, say about 33½ lakhs in all. So about 9 per cent. was contributed by public functionaries. It cannot be for one moment supposed that the public functionaries of the Western Presidency divide among them a gross amount in salaries equivalent to about 9 per cent. of the total assessable income of the whole province, so it must be concluded that a very large number of people succeed in evading payment of the tax, partially or wholly. This points to the chronic harshness of the tax. The servants of the State look to the State for the salaries guaranteed to them; but their paymaster, without their leave, and very much against their wish, withholds a portion of the salaries that have been earned, and applies it to general purposes. This looks very much like an arbitrary exercise of authority. But there is no appeal against it. The servants of the State would not have as much cause as they have for complaint at the docking of their salaries if the community at large were compelled with equal success to pay every anna of income tax that it is liable for. The contribution obtained by deducting income-tax from interest on Government Securities cannot be resisted, but it involves a breach of faith notwithstanding. If a private individual borrows Rs. 10,000 at 6 per cent. interest from a banker, he must pay neither more nor less than Rs. 600 per annum. It is not free to him, the debtor, to say to his creditor, "I am hard up, so I shall only pay 5 per cent. interest," for, if this were allowed, he might some day refuse to pay any interest at all. But the Government of India, as a debtor, deliberately ignores the obligation recorded on its promissory notes, and deducts, without the consent of its creditors, a portion of the sum that it owes for interest on its debts. In other words, to the extent of such deduction it repudiates its obligations, on the plea of an imperative necessity. This is a wrong without a remedy. Circumstances might induce the Government to double the income-tax any day; then in Bombay the unfortunate public servants would be mulcted to the extent of 6 lakhs, and holders of Government Securities to 3 lakhs.

A tax that yields in one province 33½ lakhs at an expense of about ½ lakh, must be admitted to be a productive one; but it is a very widely entertained opinion that the "game is not worth the candle." The evasions must be very numerous, and will probably always be so outside the influence of special machinery at the Presidency towns. Its inquisitorial character will always be a grave objection to the tax in India, and Native public opinion is slow to recognise anything dishonourable in making fallacious returns of private ways and means. The tax is a means of oppression and of illicit income to subordinate revenue officers, for as the Government pays them nothing for prying into their neighbours' affairs they are easily amenable to temptation not to know too much, or not to be too inquisitive. The moral influence of the tax cannot be good, and the net yield is too small in comparison with the total revenue to compensate the State for the demoralisation that the tax is calculated to engender.

CYCLING IN INDIA.

(Englishman.)

India, with its long level stretches of road, is an ideal country for bicycle riders, who have not been slow to profit by their advantages. Calcutta and other cities have their clubs, and from Peshawar to Rangoon the people are familiar with that curious sight, a Native postman on wheels. Ever since the first bicycle that was ridden in England created immense popular interest and astonishment, down to the present day, the sport which "wheelmen" love has undoubtedly been growing in favour. Some of Mr. Punch's young men allowed their lambent wit to play about the subject when cycling was yet in its infancy, and the picture of the frightened rustic, horror-stricken at the "man ridin' upon nowt," retains a good deal of its original significance even now. The introduction of India-rubber tyres has, indeed, made the approach of the cycle more silent and stealthy than of yore, when "bone-shakers" were common, and when it was easy to hear a wheelman fifty yards away. But what an advance has been made in the last twenty years in the grace and lissomeness and potential speed of the metal steed! Between the old bone-shaker which often carried wooden spokes, and had a backbone and a spring made of solid iron weighing about a hundred pounds between them, and the modern fairy like outcome of the manufactories of Coventry and elsewhere, the difference is as great as between Stephenson's "Rocket" and the locomotive which drags the "Flying Scotchman" of to-day at its rear. Cycling has passed through its period of childhood, and is enjoying at this moment a very robust adolescence, with every prospect of reaching a still more energetic and prosperous maturity. The sport has, of course, suffered from various infantile ailments. It has had its "cads on castors" who have now and then disgraced the dishonourable guild of wheelmen, and who have dashed along the highways and even the footpath to the danger and disgust of many of their fellow-citizens. Then it was considered the correct thing to ride on machines tall enough to render a "nasty cropper" a very awkward contingency indeed, thus driving away from the pastime every sensible or middle-aged person who cared for the safety of his own limbs and the nervous system of horses. Probably the direst peril that cycling has yet encountered has been the medical protest which was at one time raised against it; but the patient survived even this attack, and now most of its youthful troubles are well over. It has eliminated to a great degree the sky-larking wag on wheels, and respectable clubs have discountenanced the inane practice of "tootling" on horns on every possible occasion during a run, and the holding of race-meetings on public roads. The height of cycles has been reduced in the most satisfactory manner, so that the wheelman, instead of having almost to mount a ladder to get on his saddle, now trundles along with his feet within touching distance of the ground. The introduction of the "Safety" and "Facile" type of bicycles, and the popularity of tricycling, have produced this happy result. Then, lastly, the medical danger is no more, for eminent physicians have come forward to say not only to approve of the splendid exercise which cycling affords, but that they "wheel" themselves, and find health and enjoyment in the practice.

NATIVE WANT OF ORIGINALITY.

(Englishman.)

It is a matter of general remark that the Natives of India, however highly they are educated, produce nothing really original in literature or science. This is certainly surprising when it is remembered that, besides an ancient literature of the East, they have now for a long time had free access to the West. It is not, however, in these branches of knowledge alone that originality is conspicuous by its absence; the same phenomenon is to be found in arts and manufactures. If it be indeed true that necessity is the mother of invention, it might be reasonably argued that this state of things is a sign that the Natives of India are well off. Though the small ryots and the labouring classes cannot be called rich, still the absence of a Poor Law indicates that there need not here be the same terror of poverty as there is in Europe. Nevertheless, not to this cause can the absence of inventions be attributed so much as to the want of industrial schools, and indeed of all education not required for training persons for Government service or the Bar. Inventiveness and enterprise naturally go hand in hand. If these existed in a greater degree and with more force than at present, some practical benefits might be confidently expected in an insanitary town like Calcutta. For instance, everybody knows that the crowding of human beings, and of any other animals equally with the human, renders life unhealthy, both by exhausting the pure part of the atmosphere and by increasing the impure portion. It is not so easy to decrease the number of human residents of a town, but science and enterprise can do much to reduce the crowding of quadruped inhabitants. Thus, electric trams, as in the east of London, dispense with the necessity for horses, and similarly large dairies in the country would greatly diminish the number of cows now in the town. This last plan seems such an exceedingly simple one, and might apparently be made so lucrative withal, that it is marvellous it should not have been long ago adopted on a gigantic scale. With honest supervision, necessary buildings and machinery, and the modern appliances of science for preserving milk and butter in the hottest climate, a company might surely venture to compete with the Calcutta gowalas with confidence of success. In most parts of the Mofussil milk sells at sixteen seers per rupee or, quite unadulterated, at twelve seers, and, roughly speaking, half a seer yields an ounce of butter, or, in other words, the outturn is a chatak per seer. The dairy company might keep its own cows, or buy milk from cultivators, or perhaps both, but at first it would probably be advisable to only buy, otherwise their cattle might die mysteriously. Even now in a small way butter is manufactured by a private firm at Nowadiah, on the East Indian Railway, and sent to Calcutta at a profit; but this butter is said to be unsuitable to European taste from being slightly tainted with smoke. A big dairy much nearer than Nowadiah, and sending milk and cream as well as butter to the metropolis, should secure its owners a handsome profit, while doing much to render life in Calcutta safer and pleasanter.

LORD REAY.

(Bombay Gazette.)

In bidding farewell to Lord Reay the people of Bombay will associate with him in their regrets the lady who has been seen at his side in every good work, and who has succeeded in earning for herself a very high place in the regard and affection of the inhabitants of this Presidency. The presentation which was made to Lady Reay, on behalf of the women of Bombay, was a gratifying token of the esteem which she has won amongst those with and for whom she has laboured unceasingly, and whom she has inspired with a belief that she came to the Presidency not merely to contribute—as she has done in a striking degree—to the social success of Lord Reay's administration, but to do good to those of them who needed help. Lady Reay comes second to the Marchioness of Dufferin as the friend of the women of India, solely because she landed on these shores later than the beneficent foundress of the great Medical Women enterprise. Her labours in this cause have been as unceasing as unselfish. If she has induced others to co-operate with her in this good cause, those who have worked hardest in it have not worked harder than she. A marble bust is to commemorate her in our midst, but the true and best memorial of her goodness will be in the beneficent work of which she has been the initiator, and which will find its best commemoration in every case in which sickness and suffering are alleviated amongst the women of this Presidency through the agencies which she has done so much to establish and maintain. Lady Reay has never spared herself, taking the most generous and unselfish view of the obligations which devolved upon her as the leader of society in the Presidency. She has entered with sympathy into the life around her, and evinced an encouraging interest in all things which could fairly claim her concern. It was at one time part of the civil discipline of Rome that the Proconsuls should leave their wives behind them when they set out upon a distant charge. The modern representative of the Roman Proconsul is happily under no such obligation, or his best work would be in danger of failure, so greatly can the wife of a Governor aid him in his work and increase the acceptability of his person and his services to the society in which he labours. Shrewd and practical in all things, able at all times to take the brighter view of a situation and to inspire those who worked with a belief in themselves and in the ends they were aiming at, Lady Reay must have been to her husband all that the Viscountess Beaconsfield was to Mr. Disraeli, or Lady Palmerston to the great statesman whose place in politics was so largely determined by their splendid social qualities. But there is more to be said for Lady Reay than can be inferred from any number of analogies of this kind. What Napoleon said of Josephine may be said of the lady to whom we shall bid farewell. "She has won hearts," and has left an impression upon the memory and sympathies of many thousands in this Presidency which will not be easily effaced.

II. (Times of India.)

When George III. chanced to open a book called "An Apology for the Bible," he said he did not know that the Bible needed any apology. This is hardly the case as between Lord Reay and the more ardent of his admirers. For the last fortnight they have done nothing else but apologise for each and every act of his official life. These apologetic eulogies came to a climax the other day in a newspaper which devoted about six times as much space to Lord Reay's career as had ever been accorded to any previous Governor. There were brave men before Agamemnon; and we really cannot bring ourselves to believe that Lord Reay's regime has been six times as important as that of any of his distinguished predecessors. This species of wholesale and indiscriminate flattery is a trifle exasperating. There is, of course, a reverse side to the medal, but it is no business of ours to turn it up. The Bombay Gazette has thought it expedient to extol Lord Reay to the tune of eight columns. The historian will probably find two words enough—"Crawford" and "Mamlutdar"—and we doubt if anything more of Lord Reay's administration will be remembered ten to fifteen years hence. Still the journalist and the historian are not the same, and from the journalistic point of view the good old sentiment, De mortuis nil nisi bonum, is especially applicable to a departing Governor. We shall, then, make it our business to give a brief, fair, and unbiassed account of Lord Reay's doings here since his arrival in April, 1885. At his first start Lord Reay wisely let legislation alone. He interested himself in grievances inflicted by harsh forest laws, and this led to the appointment of an Abkari Commission, which has not, however, resulted in any very satisfactory reform. He also spent much time in the consideration of some efficient scheme of technical education. Here, perhaps, his Lordship has been more successful than in any other direction. The movement in favour of technical education had been attempted in honour of Lord Ripon, and continued in memory of the late Mr. Fawcett. But there it stuck. Lord Reay was evidently in earnest when he took it up, but his Government had no money to spare. There is a wise Scotch saw that "if you have no money yourself you should go where money is." Lord Reay went to Mr. Dinshaw Manockjee Petit. Here he struck a veritable gold mine, which has supplied the sinews of war to dozens of philanthropic and educational schemes. The splendid generosity of the Parsee millionaire has formed a striking feature of Lord Reay's period of office, and has been adequately awarded by a C.I.E., Knighthood, and, finally, a Baronetcy. Having discovered how to obtain financial assistance in one direction, other sources were freely opened to Lord Reay; and with the unstinted use of private benevolence he has, if we are to believe Dr. Pinkerton, been able to do more for the different hospitals of the city during the last five years than all the Governors put together during the last five-and-twenty. For what has been accomplished in this direction we have also to thank Lady Reay. The movement in favour of Lady Doctors and of medical education for women was originated, it is true, by Mr. Kittredge and Mr. Sorabjee Shapoorjee Bengali. But it was warmly adopted by Lady Reay, and "Lady Reay's Fund" was in existence before ever "Lady Dufferin's Fund" was dreamt of.

WASTING PUBLIC MONEY.

(Civil and Military Gazette).

The annual report of the Horse Breeding Department discloses a somewhat surprising state of things in connection with the selection of horses at home for the use of the Department in India. The whole number of stallions (thoroughbreds and Norfolk Trotters) received last year from England for the Bengal Presidency was twenty-four. One horse died on the voyage out. No one, of course, was to blame for that. The report continues:—"Some of the thoroughbreds (there were fourteen in all) are not so good as those of this class formerly received; one, St. Swithin, arrived from Bombay in Depot, unsound and lame from bone spavin in both hocks, and has been found incurably affected and unfit for stud purposes, and has been castrated prior to being sold." This does not exhaust the list of misfortunes. "The horses marginally noted have also enlarged hocks, but as the joints are of good or fair shape, and the enlargements on the seat of spavin do not produce lameness, these horses will be used for stud purposes under instructions that their stock be carefully inspected with regard to hock unsoundness, and should any of these horses' produce prove affected with spavin, they will no longer be used as sires." In the margin referred to are the names of eight English thoroughbreds, being one-third of the whole importation, and more than one-half the number of thoroughbreds. There is, however, something more. A little further on the report says: "Three are affected with cataract, but as it is not proved that this disease of the eye is in the Indian climate hereditary, they have been put to stud, and their produce will be carefully watched as regards eye disease." So much for the thoroughbred. As for the Norfolk Trotters, one of them is reported to have arrived with enlarged hocks, but to have much improved under surgical treatment. It must strike any one, we should think, that the state of things here disclosed constitutes gross neglect, if nothing more. Twenty-four horses are brought, at very considerable expense, from England to improve the breed of Indian animals, chiefly in the interest of the Indian army. Of that number one die on the way out, one is unsound and lame from bone spavin on both hocks, eight so blemished that their progeny will have to be carefully watched, three are going blind with cataract, and one is under surgical treatment for enlarged hocks. All the explanation Mr. Hallen affords for a selection of this sort by the purchasing agent, Colonel A. R. Thornhill, is the rather vague one that "he had difficulty in obtaining thoroughbred stallions of the class required for Government stud work in India," and that the order for last season was "larger than usual." But it was not a very large order; and surely Colonel Thornhill cannot find insuperable difficulty in obtaining from the broad pastures of England two dozen first-rate horses. If he does, it would be far better not to purchase at all than to waste public money on a cargo of the equine halt and blind, the like of which we suppose never sailed for India.

CONVERSION AND CHRISTIANITY

(Madras Times.)

Much as we shrink, as a general rule, from touching upon questions likely to lead to religious controversy, there are occasions when silence is no longer golden. We find men like Dr. Miller criticised roughly, because they have few converts to show as the result of many years' management of the Madras Christian College. Others are lauded for their brilliant success in bringing to the fold some now lamb or other, who may or may not eventually prove to be a wolf. In conversion, as in many other matters, speed is not always praiseworthy. The man who induces half-a-dozen Hindus to secede from their own faith and to espouse the cause of Christianity in the face of the world cannot always be regarded as a successful missionary. He may afford to smile at those nominally of his own faith who hint that secession from one's original creed is blameworthy rather than laudable; but whenever he studies the position of Christian missionary effort in this country fairly and impartially, he will find enough to make him hesitate to boast that he has done good work. Europeans who profess to be Christians are often ready to doubt the sincerity of converts, and to despise them for having forsaken the religion of their forefathers. In the Native Christian there are said to lie faults unknown to his Hindu ancestors, and like that other outcome of a Western Conquest in an Eastern land, the Eurasian, the Native Christian in India is but too frequently regarded as a model of all the vices, bereft of any virtue except that of being, in name, a Christian. There are instances to which remarks like these may be applied with justice, yet the wonder is not that there are such instances, but that there are so few. Those who watch the progress of missionary effort in this country, with a true knowledge of what Christian progress is, are not content to study statistics of conversions. To them it matters not so much whether two new converts are made or two thousand, as whether those previously made have proved worthy of their professions, have clung to their new faith and shown themselves worthy to be recognised as true Christians. To any man who has had experience as a physician of souls it is known that after a period of conviction and strength among converts frequently comes one of doubt and weakness. During this latter time the convert needs support much more powerful than was the persuasive influence previously brought to bear upon him. Left without such support, he probably sinks into the "slough of despond," and finds in his latter end a worse fate than was ever in store for him at the beginning.

The point to which we wish to call special attention is this: Urged on, perhaps, by the outcry of a section of the community which pretends to judge of results by statistics, our missions devote more attention than they can well afford to proselytising or to educating without lessening their ability to continue the cultivation of plants already yielded by good seed sown. We hear from Eurasians that they are neglected, that their poor are not properly attended to, and that there is danger of rising generations lapsing into the most terrible state of heathenism. From Native Christians a similar complaint comes, running to this effect: "You have converted me, and now I am neglected, while you seek fresh converts, whether directly by means of proselytising or indirectly by means of education." There is truth at the bottom of these complaints. The Christians already gathered into the fold are neglected, while the shepherd seeks fresh stray lambs further afield. Soundness and permanence of conversion is being sacrificed to a desire to make a display. A system is in force totally opposed to the teachings of religion and common-sense.

alike; and if this system continues there can be no hope that Christianity will make its way in this country as the life-giving religion of its people. After a convert is made he may do more indirectly than directly to convert others. He may show that he is respected and properly treated; that he has gained ground in the opinion of his teachers, and that he has entered upon a new life deserving of imitation. But this can only be the case, as a rule, if he continues to receive active encouragement and support from his Christian teachers. Ground gained must be maintained. Every step made in advance must be assured, or the latter end of some of our pseudo-Christians will be worse than the beginning, and irretrievable damage will be done to the name and fame of Christianity. The whole blame does not rest upon the Missionary, who might well expect at least the encouragement of approval from Christian folk in general. But, after all, the chief measure of censure must be meted out to him. He has allowed himself to be drawn from the path of strict duty by the desire to achieve a transient reputation. Instead of making and maintaining Christians, he has made nominal Christians, and then passed on, seeking to make more. This, at least, is our opinion, formed after a careful hearing of many complaints from Eurasians and Native Christians. The Christian community in this country considers itself neglected in favour of Hindus; and if it be right in its belief, then, indeed, the system of missionary work is capable of much improvement.

THE DAK BUNGLER.—I.

(Pioneer.)

I live in a dāk bungalow. I do not live here from choice. I would rather live in a palatial hotel or in my own house; but in this station, where a paternal Government decrees that I should reside when not out on inspection duty, there are no palatial hotels, nor is there a dwelling-house available for rental. Consequently, I take it that Providence has claims upon my gratitude for allowing me to live even in the dāk bungalow.

It is not a bad dāk bungalow. It is roomy, and I have the free run of it, as there are no other residents; and, so far as I can make out, none are likely to pour in for a considerable time. The khansamah is not old; he is fair, sleek, oiled and curled, wears spotless raiment (only he will wear a dhoti to mark the exclusively honorary character of his functions), and displays a refined obsequiousness that must be unspeakably gratifying to gentlemen who come up to collect orders for Calcutta tailoring firms. He gets six rupees a month as his stipend from the State, but possesses four houses in the Native city, and he looks as if he owned much corn and oil and wine, and other Biblical luxuries. He keeps a staff of five servants, who perform the executive functions of the establishment, and of whom I may have more to say anon. These minions discharge the current duties of the household, but, on days when your bill is to be presented, the khansamah himself graces the banquet, and hands you the fried potatoes with a courtly grace that is overwhelming when first experienced.

I believe this khansamah is unduly susceptible to outward impressions. At least, it is only the possession of a gold prince-nez that I can attribute the circumstance of his honouring me with a written bill-of-fare at my solitary dinner. He perhaps takes me for an intellectual officer of the Educational Department. The following is one of his menus; and I wish here to say, in all solemnity, that this is an absolutely and reverentially accurate transcript of the original document invoicing the meal. Its size, by exact measurement, is  $3\frac{1}{2}$  by 3 inches, and it is written on half-tola letter paper with pale yellowish bazaar ink.

To those who may be inclined to treat the orthography of the above production in a captious or jeering mood, I may say that the meal was an excellent one. The immediate termination of a Planters' Meet explained the profuse liberality of the menu. I ought perhaps to mention that the "seaking" or "second" course, consisting of "Prune fish Salads," was really a prawn salad, and that the "Teapshee" pudding was what we are more used to call a "tipsy" pudding.

But let us cavil no longer, for my khansamah, with all his orthographical idiosyncrasies, has the true soul of an artist, and he (or his minions) exerts all the resources of a fertile culinary imagination to furnish me with fresh and undreamt, of variations on the dāk bungalow moorgee and mutton chop, and for this I am inexpressibly grateful.

The station where my dāk bungalow is is still fairly cool, and the oleanders are gaily sprouting forth. I may say that I am not so very far from the mighty snows and the poetic Terai. But I thank goodness that I am not in the Western Doors. I once met a man who had been in the Western Doors. He was going home, and, on the voyage, made an injudicious proposal of marriage to a young lady fellow-passenger on board the steamer. Young lady's guardian promptly accepted but made it a sine qua non that gentleman should get his life insured. Opening for release was thus offered to hasty but repenting suitor. Presenting himself at the Insurance Office in London, he was ushered before Board of elderly gentlemen, and asked where was his habitual residence. Reply, "The Western Doors." Elderly gentlemen on Board nonplussed; Gazetteers ransacked in vain. "Ah, well, I am not surprised you gentlemen don't know the place, for no European has ever come back from there alive. Oh, yes, though! there was one, and I believe he lived as far as Aden." Insurance proposal was not accepted, and match fell through. However, this is a frivolous digression, called forth by the topographical allusion to the site of my dāk bungalow.

The station is large, but has none of the conveniences of civilised life—to wit, shops and hotels. The itinerant box-wallah and a bazaar cloth-merchant supply our outward wants, and the inevitable Babu wine and general merchant furnishes our creature comforts. There is also, of course, a "Medical Hall." I have come to the conclusion that if I needed a coffin it would have to be telegraphed for; there is no local industry in this line. This dearth of civilised conveniences—I don't refer to the coffin-manufacture alone—I attribute to the absence of any military element in the station. I have observed that when the military settle in a place trade is attracted thither and fostered. The enterprising Parsee opens a hotel and a wine and general store; a European druggist sets up in business; an auction and commission-sale rooms blooms forth, with perhaps a branch in the coach-building line; and even a Bengali firm of civil and military tailors, outfitters, and habitmakers, may be induced to court local patronage. But these luxuries are denied us here, for we are only a civilian community dependent on the value-payable post for our wants and luxuries.

However, in spite of these deficiencies, it is all very tranquil, and more or less idyllic. The March winds blow a continuous gale all day through the big trees, which keep up a roar like the distant surf. At sunset this ceases, and a colony of owlets who share the dāk bungalow roof with me come out and prattle in a favourite adjacent tree. Then a stroll on a dusty road, then dinner, then study of newspapers and correspondence. At intervals I hear the locomotive whistles and the rattle of passing trains, which sounds, unholy as they are in themselves, strike very gratefully on the ear as representing the connecting link with the outside world.

Besides the owlets and other denizens of the bungalow already mentioned (not forgetting the Government mosquitoes, flies and cockroaches), there is, of course, a dog. He is a large yellow dog, patronised by the khansamah. His tail was cut, probably in early infancy. The amputating operation, however, seems to have gone further than was intended; and the result is that there are now some thirty-eight linear inches of dog to about an inch-and-a-quarter of tail. I think he resents my intrusion. He has hitherto declined all my overtures of peace, and he occasionally soothes his ruffled feelings by barking at me from a respectful distance when he meets me outside.

Oh!—and then there are the fowls. The khansamah supports them. I have observed that there are four cocks to six hens on the establishment, an arrangement which must be calculated to produce domestic complications. The hens are very sociable. I surprised one on a chair in my room, where she had been spending her leisure in laying an egg. She scuttled away very indignantly, but presently announced her achievement in a triumphant cackle that echoed through the empty chambers. She has not since repeated the feat under the same circumstances.

Now that I have described my humble but peaceful abode and its principal inmates, I will defer to another occasion a further instalment of my short and simple annals, impressions and experiences.

THE BUNGLER.

BENGAL.
(April 29.)

THE Calcutta Volunteers are at last well housed. The building erected for them is a club in many respects, and as the band plays there on Friday afternoons, no doubt afternoon teas will be quite the thing. With such attractions there are many worse ways of enjoyment than volunteering.

THE prospectus of the second exhibition of the Calcutta Fine Art Society is issued. The exhibition will be opened on the 20th December next. The Society offers two gold and eight silver medals, besides which there is the Viceroy's gold medal, Sir Stuart Bayley's prize, Sir A. Croft's four medals, and eleven other prizes.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from the Garrow Hills, Assam, says:—"Influenza is here and everywhere. You will be interested to know that that curious disease, nona-nona, has broken out at Kannia and Jatrapur simultaneously with the influenza. I believe that the cases have not been very numerous, but several deaths from it have occurred amongst natives. They go to sleep, and it appears that it is impossible to awaken them. The appearances are not that of collapse, but of natural sleep to the unskilled observer."

It would seem that romantic lovers are still to be found on the banks of the Hooghly. In a village called Tangail another case of "Villikins and his Dinah" was enacted a few days ago. A young Calcutta graduate, on being disinherited by his father for marrying a lady of the reformed class against his father's wishes, agreed with his "dearly beloved" to put an end to their existence by opium poisoning. They bid each other adieu and swallowed opium. The lady died the next morning; "the young graduate" "revived," it is said, under the influence of stomach pump and other medical aid, is living now after paying a penalty of Rs. 40 for his "rash" act.

MORE credit, says the Englishman, is due to the Calcutta Trades Association than has yet been accorded for its share in bringing about the abolition of the Silver Duty. In its most recent appeal, some three months ago, it specially urged, in view of the Budget surplus, that the unjust duty should be repealed, and that the obnoxious system of compulsory hall-marking should be abolished. The Association has steadily pressed this grievance upon the notice of Government for many years, and has been mainly instrumental in bringing the opinions of the various public bodies to bear upon the subject. In particular, therefore, the Association is to be congratulated on the success that has so far attended the agitation. It is to be feared, however, that, unless the arrangements with regard to hall-marking in India are satisfactory, the reform will do little for the indigenous industry.

THE report by Dr. Gregg, Sanitary Commissioner, on a tour of inspection which he undertook in February to inquire into the causes of the annual cholera outbreaks in Darjeeling Terai and Julpigori Doars, is published. The principal cause, he says, is drinking polluted water. Some tea gardens drew their water-supply from polluted streams, and others from polluted wells. Where there is a pure water-supply there is little or no cholera. The disease is also imported by coolies from Chota Nagpore, who drink polluted water during their journey along the route between Caragola Ghat and Titalia in the Purneah district. He recommends that special care be taken on the tea gardens to provide a pure water-supply, where pure streams do not exist, by means of properly protected wells, and that the district authorities be directed to look after the water-supply en route. Dr. Gregg also points out that room exists on some gardens for greater attention to sanitation in the coolies' lines, and more careful supervision is needed over markets, especially Government markets in the Doars, to prevent over-ripe fruit and unwholesome food from being sold. He points out the need for improvement in vital statistics, and suggests a form to be filled in by planters.

MADRAS.
(April 30.)

BRIGADIER - GENERAL FARRINGTON, Adjutant - General, Madras, retires from his appointment early this month, and we hear that Colonel Gatacre, who has just returned from Burma, is freely mentioned as a likely successor.

LIEUT.-COLONEL HIME, R.A., lately Commandant at St. Thomas' Mount, Madras, had a narrow escape of being killed at Coonoor, on the night of the 19th ultimo, by a branch of a tree that fell upon his head during a severe storm of thunder, wind, and rain. He was unconscious for a short time, but is rapidly recovering. The branch was eighteen inches in circumference at the thick end.

THE question of jurisdiction of the Nizam's Courts over European British subjects has been raised by a young English lady living in Hyderabad within Native jurisdiction. She is accused of assaulting a Native, who trespassed into her compound and remained there in spite of her remonstrances. She relies upon the treaty of 10th July, 1861, but against this it is urged that the treaty was never completed, and that in any case the Nizam has sovereign jurisdiction concurrent with the jurisdiction of the British Resident. The question was argued at great length before the full Bench of the Nizam's High Court, but the Judges reserved judgment, with a view to consulting their own Government on the subject.

BOMBAY.
(May 2.)

MR. T. H. STEWART, C.S., has been allowed extraordinary leave on medical certificate for two months.

MAJOR-GENERAL C. A. GOODFELLOW, V.C., R.E., Chief Engineer, Public Works Department, is allowed leave on urgent private affairs for six months.

THE HON. A. F. BEAUFORT has been appointed a member of the Board of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, vice Colonel G. L. C. Merewether, R.E., appointed chairman.

SURGEON MEYER, M.B. (Lond.), the recently appointed Professor of Physiology at the Grant Medical College, has had to take six months' sick leave to Europe. In consequence there is an acting vacancy at the College.

A HANDSOME marble bust of Sir Frank Souter, late Commissioner of Police in Bombay, provided by the subscribers to the Sir Frank Souter Memorial Fund, and which recently arrived in Bombay, was placed in the Municipal Hall on Wednesday afternoon at the close of the Municipal Standing Committee's meeting. The bust is precisely similar to the one erected in front of the Police Commissioner's office at Byculla, and has been executed by the same artist, Mr. Roscoe Mullins.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—Rain during week in parts of Kaira, Khandeish, Poona, Ahmednugger, Sholapore, Southern Mahratta Country, and Kattywar. Exotic cotton in two talukas of Dharwar blighted. Crops otherwise good. Harvesting of late crops continues in several districts, and cotton picking in Gujarat, Southern Mahratta Country, and Baroda. Probable outturn of late crops in Tanna from 8 to 16 annas. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in most districts.

The Bombay Municipal Corporation on Monday unanimously passed the following resolution which was proposed and seconded by Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., C.S.I., C.I.E., and Sir Henry Morland, Kt., respectively:—"That the Corporation desire to place on record their high appreciation of the great and valuable services rendered to the City of Bombay by the departing Municipal Commissioner, Mr. E. C. K. Ollivant, C.S., C.I.E., during an administration, the longest, the most eventful, and the most memorable of any Commissioner. That the Corporation cordially acknowledge that the success which has crowned Mr. Ollivant's administration has been due to his firm and comprehensive grasp of Municipal problems, combined with rare talent for administration and organisation, sound judgment, great tact, and untiring energy and capacity for work." Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, C.S.I., Dr. Cowasjee Hormusjee, Mr. Grattan Geary, and the Hon. Mr. R. M. Sayani spoke in flattering terms in support of the resolution, which was carried unanimously. Mr. Ollivant attended the meeting after the above resolution was unanimously adopted by the Corporation, and on his being apprised by the President of the fact he made a long reply, thanking the Councillors collectively and individually for the handsome terms in which the resolution had been framed and passed by them.

At Wednesday's meeting of the Municipal Standing Committee, Captain Sir Henry Morland, the chairman, proposed a vote of thanks to the retiring Municipal Commissioner, Mr. E. C. K. Ollivant, the resolution making mention of the many and eminent services rendered by him to the city, his uniform courtesy, unwearied devotion to the duties of his office, and of the zealous manner in which he had on all occasions striven to uphold and extend the rights and privileges of the Municipality. The motion was seconded by Mr. M. N. Banerjee, and carried by acclamation, as was another proposed by Dr. Cowasjee Hormusjee to the effect that tablets commemorative of Mr. Ollivant's services should be erected at Tansa and in the new Municipal Hall. Mr. Ollivant acknowledged the compliment in an appropriate speech.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAUB.

MR. HALLEN, Superintendent of Horse Breeding Department, and Colonel Deane have arrived in Simla.

MRS. FOGGO is, we hear, about to renew her engagement with the Countess of Dufferin Fund in Calcutta for a further period of three years.

MISS HELEN GRANT has been appointed as lady doctor in charge of the new Victoria Hospital for Women at Kotah in Rajpootana.

THE office of the Central Committee of the Countess of Dufferin Fund at Simla has this year been moved to the "Boorj," the Military Secretary to the Viceroy's officers.

ON Friday Lahore was treated to a very realistic imitation of a London fog, of the regulation pea-soup colour. It was made of dust, and at noon it was as dark as is usual at 8 p.m.

No dates have as yet been fixed for the Levée or Birthday Ball this month in Simla, nor are they likely to be so until the arrival of the Viceroy on the 25th.

THE Commander-in-Chief, Lady and Miss Roberts, and their party, on return from their hill tour to Naini Tal, Ranikhet, and Chaulhatta, passed through Bareilly on the 22nd, en route to Saharanpur and Simla.

DR. VOELCKER, after making himself acquainted with the conditions under which the new sewerage scheme for Allahabad would have to be carried, left Allahabad on the 24th ult., in order to complete his tour through the North-West Provinces.

HEAVY rain set in at Simla on Friday night, and continued throughout Saturday. This fall, coming after the rain of the previous week, should do something towards replenishing the springs and alleviating the water difficulty. The weather generally in Upper India has continued in an unsettled state during the last few days. Heavy rain is reported from various districts in these Provinces, and a rapid fall of temperature has followed. In Allahabad, though there was no rainfall worth recording, the change has been most marked, the mean temperature of Saturday being 80°·3° as compared with 97°·2° two days before.

A CONTEMPORARY records the death of Mr. T. Campion, auditor, O. and R. Railway, which occurred at Benares on the 22nd ult. Mr. Campion went from Goshainganj, his headquarters, to Benares about a fortnight ago to check some accounts in connection with the recent defalcations by the goods clerk. He was attacked with influenza, culminating in pneumonia. Nothing serious, however, was apprehended, and he was progressing favourably towards recovery till Saturday night, when a change for the worse set in, and by 11 o'clock the next morning he had breathed his last. Mr. Campion was a promising young man, who had but a few months previously been transferred from Chandausi, and was very much liked by all with whom he came in contact. His untimely death will be a loss to the Audit Department.

MR. STANLEY'S TRAVELLING CASE.—It is not every day that we can learn what is the ideally best kind of travelling case in the opinion of so competent a judge as Mr. Stanley. The distinguished traveller paid a visit a few days since to the well-known establishment of Messrs. Asprey, at 166, Bond-street, and after carefully examining the merits of their portable travelling cases, selected one of their flat suit cases, with all necessary toilet and travelling articles arranged in the most convenient and compact way, and, although only seven inches deep, having ample room for several suits of clothes. The stands with fittings are movable, and can be placed on a toilet table. Altogether it is a remarkably elegant and beautifully planned article.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—The principal change here on Saturday was a rise of 3-16 in the Mysore Company's Shares, upon the announcement of the dividend. Nundydroog improved 1-16. Mysore Shares were last quoted 6½ to 6 3-16, Nundydroog 2 to 2½, Indian Consolidated 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 9s. to 9s. 6d., Ooregum Ordinary 2 to 2½, ditto Preference 2 to 2½, Devala-Moyar 2s. 6d. to 3s., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 9s. to 10s., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., South-east Mysore 1s. to 1s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 1s. to 1s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 13s. to 14s., New South-east Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

AN exaggerated report has got about of one of the incidents that occurred lately on the Shan-Siam frontier, says an up-country paper. The leader of the Commission, it may be remembered, had on a certain occasion to turn the Siamese out of one small State which had already been declared British territory. We may as well state what actually occurred. The petty chief having made himself over to the Siamese they had occupied the State with a small force. Of necessity the Commission had to seize the chief, and expel the Siamese. An order was enough; the Siamese made no resistance, but went off quietly across the border, while the chief was carried off with our camp, and another man was put in his place temporarily. Nothing could illustrate better than this incident the wholesome respect which the Commission succeeded in inspiring all along the frontier.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MAY 12.

—:O:—

THE POSTAL SERVICE TO AUSTRALIA AND INDIA.

In answer to Mr. SUMMERS,

Mr. RAIKES said there was at present an estimated loss of £78,000 a year upon the postal service from this country to Australia.

In reply to a further question from Mr. SUMMERS,

Mr. RAIKES said: The additional loss over and above that now incurred, which will result from reducing the postage on letters sent from this country to India and Australia to 2½d., is estimated at £88,400 a year. A further loss of £42,000 a year would be the result of making the rate 1d. instead of 2½d. And a still further loss of £50,000 would follow a reduction of postage rates to all the colonies and India to 1d. The hon. member will see that the total of these reductions, by bringing the rate down to 1d. generally, would come to £180,400.

THE PROTECTION OF INDIAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Mr. HOWORTH asked the Under-Secretary for India whether, inasmuch as the Indian Factory Act did not apply to the Native States, he would consider the advisability of urging upon their rulers the necessity of introducing legislation for the protection of women and children employed in the manufactories of those States, and who now worked from dawn to sunset.

Sir J. GORST: The policy of the Indian Government is to interfere as little as possible in the internal affairs of Native States so long as the rulers govern justly. But the Secretary of State will bring this question to the notice of the Government of India, with a view to their advising Native States containing factories to follow the factory legislation of British India. (Hear, hear.)

MAY 13.

MILL OPERATIVES IN INDIA.

In answer to Mr. J. MACLEAN,

Sir J. GORST said: The Bill now before the Indian Legislature provides four days' holiday a month for women and children.

Mr. MACLEAN: Are these four holidays to be Sundays?

Sir J. GORST: The Bill does not specify that they are to be Sundays.

MAY 15.

THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY SCHEME.

Sir G. CAMPBELL asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true that the Government, having just bought up the Guaranteed South Indian Railway at a heavy premium, was about to give another guarantee to the same or a reorganised company for the purpose of working the line; whether the terms of the fresh guarantee were 3 per cent. and half of any net profit after paying the guarantee; and whether the result would be that the Government, being able to borrow at 3 per cent., and having paid for the line at the rate of 131 per cent., now gave to the company 3 per cent., plus the salaries of the directors, the patronage of the administration, and the chance of additional payment in case of profit.

Sir J. GORST: Negotiations are now going on between the Secretary of State and the South Indian Railway Company with the view of the latter undertaking the management and working of the line just purchased by the Secretary of State. The terms of the agreement are not yet settled.

MR. HENRY WHYMPER, of the Murree Brewery, having observed a letter in the Allahabad Morning Post from the Rev. Mr. Evans, the Temperance Missionary, censuring that paper for inserting an advertisement about beer from the Murree Brewery Company, replies, and states that the Army Temperance Association solicited and obtained a beer advertisement from him last September, and that last January the reverend gentleman wrote and told him that temperance funds were so low that an advance payment for the Company's advertisement would greatly assist the association. He concludes by saying that the advertisement published in the Morning Post was not solicited, while that in the paper belonging to the Temperance Association was solicited, and was published with the remark that a member of any temperance association may drink the Company's beers with the best possible results to himself.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

WHEN WE WERE BOYS.*

To every man comes a chance, which neglected seldom if ever returns. Accordingly, when a grand flourish of trumpets, and outspread of flaring posters announced the appearance of "When We Were Boys," by Mr. William O'Brien, curiosity was raised as to what use he would make of the opportunity of explaining much which needed explanation. It might, of course, have been assumed that the work would deal with the present movement in Ireland. A gentleman who had taken such a prominent part in the agitation which now racks the Emerald Isle, was not likely to do otherwise than select rebellion for his subject. In this respect public anticipation will not be disappointed. The book deals largely with the efforts of Paddy to shake off a yoke which galls; and it is not a little strange that, while Gladstonian orators never cease to descant upon the "Union of Hearts," which is to be the order of the day when (ay, when?) Home Rule is triumphant, Mr. William O'Brien is none too careful in the work before us to conceal that dying hate towards England is the spirit which animates every true son of Erin, and that National "Freedom" is the aim and object of the Secret Societies which riddle the land.

Thus far there is not much cause of complaint. He who runs may read, and it would be a pity if the clearness of speech with which the characters of the romance proclaim what "Home Rule" means is lost upon the public in general; but many amongst us will feel disappointed at the omissions—neither few nor unimportant—which mar the virtues of Mr. William O'Brien's tale, and which justify the assertion that the Apostle of Martyrdom has missed his chance. Take an example. The Parnell Commission dealt plainly, perhaps it might be said severely, with the omission on the part of the Irish party to afford any explanation as to the expenditure of a trifling sum of "over £100,000." Surely it would have been well had this interesting subject been treated in some detail in a work, the raison d'être of which is to popularise the cause for which Mr. William O'Brien courted political imprisonment, and raised his breeches and moustachios to the level of martyrdom. But no! From beginning to end there is not a syllable as to who became the happy possessor of an unexplained balance sufficiently large to produce at any time and in any country an army of agitators ready and willing to cast themselves into the fray, certain personally advantageous conditions being made clear ere the sword is drawn from the scabbard. Of a surety the "almighty dollar" is a factor in the world's history. Once again, some would have it that "boycotting" is merely exclusive dealing, while others incline to the view—and they have the support of three of Her Majesty's judges—that they who indulged in this method of enforcing obedience to the unwritten code of the Land League "were guilty of a criminal conspiracy;" but be this as it may, that the procedure is inhuman and cruel goes without for to say. Might not this mystery, too, have found an explanation?

Space precludes further allusion to this very interesting subject, and we pass on to the tale itself. What must we tell our readers? Here criticism need not hesitate or halt. From beginning to end there is scarcely one single page that would find a reader were the author other than the great Irish patriot Mr. William O'Brien. Some persons will always be found who take deep interest in narratives of "double, double, toil and trouble." When the powers of darkness belch forth on the land treachery, treason and rebellion; when society is dislocated, and the hand of everyone is against his neighbour; when, in a sentence, paradise is turned into hell, then a tale which proclaims how all this happens is likely to become popular and attractive. But even in this direction Mr. William O'Brien has contrived to burden his narrative with a mass of turgid and unreadable vapourings; and from the depths of our heart we pity all those poor wretched supporters of the "Uncrowned King," who for their sins will have to buy, if not to read, the most dismal failure which the present, or, indeed, any other literary season, is likely to produce.

THE COLOSSUS OF RHODES.

Sir George Birdwood writes to the editor of the St. James's Gazette:—"Sir,—It is to be regretted that the Daily Graphic and the St. James's Gazette should have helped to circulate the absurd statement attributed to M. Eiffel that 'The Colossus of Rhodes'—was a myth. Students of art have always known that the mediæval story of its having straddled the entrance to the 'Little Harbour' was a pure romance; but of the existence of the statue itself no one who has read the descriptions of it by Pliny, Lucian, and other ancient authors, can have the slightest doubt. From these accounts we learn that it was about 100 ft. high, that 12½ tons of bronze and 7½ tons of iron were employed in casting it, that it took twelve years to construct, and cost £72,000. It was raised on a marble pedestal, and was probably set up in some public place close to the sea; where, however, it stood for only fifty-six years, having been thrown down by an earthquake B.C. 227. Pliny gives a very detailed description of its ruins, which, it is said, were ultimately carried away by a Jewish pedlar, from Ur of the Chaldees, who loaded ninety camels with them.

"It is just like the egotism of our modern monstrosity-mongers—not one of whom has as yet shown anything of the remarkable capacity possessed by ancient and mediæval engineers for picturesque construction—that they should now tell us that the Colossus was a myth. It is just what might have been expected from the author of the hateful 'Eiffel Tower.' The builder of the Colossus became bankrupt over his work, and committed suicide; and it is to be devoutly desired that his fate may be repeated in the case of any one who may, in useless emulation of the diabolic 'tour-de-force' at Paris, adventure on the erection of a similar structure in London—although suicide is scarcely to be hoped of the insensitive sort of people who would attempt such an outrage,—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

THE INDEBTEDNESS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.

According to the Pioneer a recent resolution of the Government of India calls the attention of all Local Governments and heads of departments "to the imperative duty which devolves on them of taking severe notice of the conduct of clerks and other employés who allow themselves to fall into embarrassed circumstances." In a former Resolution, issued in January, 1884, it was pointed out that assistants in Government offices should clearly understand that, if they voluntarily contracted debts or obligations which they were unable to meet, they would render themselves liable to summary dismissal. But there has been only too much reason to fear that these orders have not always been properly appreciated by those concerned; and the Government "desires therefore to supplement them by more definite instructions as to what constitutes such a state of indebtedness as to render it undesirable that a person should be retained in the public service." Explicit rules have in consequence been issued on the subject, laying down in detail the circumstances under which an officer in Government service would merit summary dismissal. These may be summarised as follows:—(a) Where half the salary of a Government official is constantly being attached for debt; or (b) has been continuously under attachment for more than two years; or (c) is attached for a sum which, under ordinary circumstances, it will require more than two years to repay, a full schedule of the officer's debts is to be obtained by the head of the office, and the case dealt with in the same way as if the debtor had taken advantage of the Insolvency Court. In such cases the special points to be looked to are: the proportion which the debts bear to the salary and the extent to which they detract from the debtor's efficiency as a public servant; whether the debtor's position is irretrievable, and whether it is desirable under the circumstances to retain him in the particular position he occupies or in any position under Government. In accordance with these orders all local heads of departments have to submit annually the required report and schedule of debts of the officers so involved under them.

MANY have looked for a sign and not been given it, observed the Pioneer; but Mr. Dyer, of the Bombay Guardian, and of fame in connection with the Patna Mission case, is a more favoured mortal. In a Bombay paper we read that at a recent meeting at Shanghai, whither we suppose he has gone to gather fuel for his fanaticism, Mr. Dyer stated that he had "an assurance from God that within two years the importation of Indian opium into China would be stopped." That Mr. Dyer was well dowered with assurance has long been a matter of notoriety; but we may be permitted to doubt the celestial origin which the possessor ascribes to it. "There is nothing," wrote Sydney Smith in the early days of the century, à propos of a certain reverend gentleman of the name of Styles—"there is nothing which disgusts us more than the familiarity which these impious coxcombs affect with the ways and designs of Providence. Every man is an Amos or a Malachi. One rushes out of his chambers and tells us we are beaten by the French, because we do not abolish the slave trade. Another assures us that we have no chance of victory till India is evangelised." Clearly Mr. Styles has cendants even in these days.

LORD STRATHNAIRN.

ON Thursday next, at the Royal United Service Institute, a meeting will be held for the purpose of organising some arrangement for commemorating the public services rendered to his country by the late Field-Marshal Lord Strathnairn. Why nothing has yet been done in that direction is an historical problem difficult to solve. A short time ago the remains of another Field-Marshal of England, one who had done good service to his country, too, were laid to rest in our great cathedral with all the pomp, pride and circumstance of a military funeral, and it was allowed by all that the honour was well deserved. But there were many, especially officers who had served in India, who, coming away from Lord Napier of Magdala's grave, asked themselves the question, "Why has the nation so neglected the memory of Lord Strathnairn?" Men could only put the question to themselves and wonder. The services of the unhonoured Field-Marshal were on record; and, in the zenith of his fame, when he returned from India after the quelling of the Mutiny, the Times told the people of England that, "had Sir Hugh Rose lived in the days of the Roman Empire, the citizens of Rome, to do honour to his successes as a general, would have turned out and have drawn his chariot of victory to the Capitol." What those successes were the brilliant pen of Malleon, the historian of the Indian Mutiny, has told in glowing periods:—

"Marching from Mau in November, Sir Hugh Rose had, in five months, traversed Central India, crossing its numerous rivers, storming strong forts, taking many towns, defeating armies vastly superior in numbers, led by men, and by a woman whose hatred of the British name incited them to efforts not to be surpassed in the annals of the Mutiny. He and his gallant comrades had accomplished these great deeds during a season the terrible heat of which far surpassed the heat of the corresponding season of previous years, and under a sun which proved scarcely less deadly than the enemy. Yet moving steadily onwards, regarding difficulties as only obstacles to be overcome; keeping in view the goal at which he aimed, Sir Hugh had marched from victory to victory. It may be said of him that it was his character which created his success. Careless of himself he conducted every reconnaissance, he planned every action, he was foremost in every attack, he courted danger and exposure. At the same time no leader ever paid greater attention to the soldiers. To look after their comforts, to see after a hard-fought action that the wounded were attended to, and, after a long and tedious march, that provisions were abundant, was with him a sacred duty. It was this which endeared him to the troops—this that made them fight cheerily against numbers, endure the killing rays of the fierce sun. If he demanded all their energies in the battlefield they saw that their wants were attended to when the battle was over, that he never spared himself, that, with all the cares of command upon him, he managed to find time to attend to them. It was that sympathy which evoked the enthusiasm which enabled the soldiers of Sir Hugh Rose to equal the achievements of any warriors of whom history makes record."

There were good and faithful services rendered by Sir Hugh previous to the Indian Mutiny in Syria, Turkey, and the Crimea, which it was possible for Englishmen to forget; but it is difficult to understand the forgetfulness of services such as those which the historian of the Mutiny has described. And these are not all. When Sir Hugh Rose was appointed to the chief command of the Indian armies, he set to himself the noble task of ameliorating in every way the condition of the soldiers under him. The state of the army which was handed over to him then was not one altogether satisfactory. His predecessor, able and zealous as he was, lacked several of the qualities which go to make up a successful commander of men. It is speaking no evil of the dead to say of Sir William Mansfield that he had not the rare secret of winning his way to the soldier's heart. It is a gift given but to few, but it is a grand possession to have, and Sir Hugh Rose had it. Swift and severe to punish crime, as he proved himself to be in his energetic stamping-out of that spirit of insubordination which got partly hold of the local European force in 1858-59, and which was known in India by the name of the White Mutiny, he was throughout the armies he commanded known and recognised as the best friend of the soldier—accepting the term soldier as embracing all ranks without distinction. Officers and men found their interests guarded and cared for with fairness without favouritism. When complimented at the farewell public dinner given to him at Calcutta, previous to his leaving India, on the way he had distributed the patronage of his office, he said:—"It would have been a pasquinade on military merit if I had not given the spurs to the knights who won them." The ringing cheers which rang through the crowded hall when those words were uttered stamped their truthfulness and sincerity. The lot of the common soldier in India is a pleasant one to-day; but it should not be forgotten how much is due to the action of Sir Hugh Rose to make it so in days when the task was more difficult than now. The good he did then happily lives after him.

It is true that, in the eventide of life, there came to him rank and title—he died a Field-Marshal of England, and a peer of the realm. But when he died the memory of his good work seemed to die too. No memorial of him exists but in the pages of the historian, and in the hearts of surviving soldiers who knew his worth. It is well that the long public neglect of a great public servant should cease. And it is to be hoped that now, late though it be, some fitting tribute will be made by the nation to the memory of one who served it so well in peace and war.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE rumour that Nurwara Eliya is to be made a sanitarium for the troops in Ceylon has been revived.

LIEUTENANT GORDON YOUNG, R.H.A., now at Meerut, will in all probability officiate as aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, until the end of October, and Captain Johnston, now A.D.C., as Private Secretary.

THE next Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition will probably be held at Rawalpindi in November, with Sir T. D. Baker, K.C.B., as President. Preparations have already begun, and the central committee have their circular in the Press. From all accounts it is to be a much bigger affair, and in every way more attractive than such exhibitions usually are.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to hand over the payment of the Military Department pensioners in the Bombay Presidency to the Civil Department. If possible, from the 1st July the pensioners will be paid by treasury officers. It is intended to retain the Pension Paymaster, Southern Konkan, who is a General List cavalry officer.

THE Civil and Military Gazette hears that Sir George Greaves has nominated Colonel R. L. H. Curties, 2nd Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment, for the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General at Army Head-Quarters, Bombay, which will become vacant on the 1st July next, when the present incumbent's (Lieutenant-Colonel H. L. Dnndas) tenure expires.

THE Government Gazette announces that Deputy Surgeon-General Farquhar's appointment to act as Surgeon-General is a temporary measure. The question of Dr. Sibthorpe's promotion to the Deputy Surgeon-Generalship was, it appears, submitted to the Government of India, who made a reference to the Secretary of State before deciding it in Dr. Sibthorpe's favour.

THE Government of India have decided to transfer the military station of Sambalpur from the Presidency to the Nagpur district. It is considered that this will be a more convenient arrangement, in view of the extension for traffic of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway eastward from Nagpur, while the difficulties of access from the East remain unchanged, and also because Sambalpur is situated in the Central Provinces. The Bombay authorities have no objection to the Nagpur district taking over Sambalpur, but they request that it may still continue to be garrisoned by Madras troops.

THE telegraphic announcement from home that Colonel C. S. Steward, of the Madras Cavalry, has been appointed to a First-class District Command in India is somewhat difficult to understand, as there is no command available in Madras. He has, moreover, been passed over for a brigade already. Reference is probably intended to be made to Colonel R. C. Steward, Madras Cavalry, who has just been appointed to the Burma Command. The statement regarding Colonel Lequesne's appointment to a District on the Indian establishment requires modification, he having been posted to Shorncliffe as Brigadier-General on the Staff of the South-Eastern District, in succession to Sir Baker Russell.

THE Government of India have just issued orders for the formation of new Afridi Companies in certain selected regiments. These are the 21st, the 24th, and the 26th Punjab Infantry, and the 4th and 5th Infantry, Punjab Frontier Force. Two companies will be added to the 26th Punjab Infantry, and one company to each of the other battalions. These will be in addition to the present establishment of eight companies.

THE Civil and Military Gazette is glad to learn that the Commander-in-Chief in India, like other authorities, has recently had under consideration the question of the increase of enteric fever amongst soldiers, and the sanitary condition of cantonments generally. It is feared that there is not at all stations that close attention to sanitary matters which is imperative for the preservation of the health of European soldiers under the climatic conditions of India; and the earnest attention of all officers commanding stations has been directed to the urgent necessity for close supervision of the conservancy arrangements of the stations they command. It has been pointed out that there is too great a tendency to pass on the responsibility of supervision to subordinates, who in their turn are apt to take the same course.

THE Government of India has ruled that an officer of the British service, holding the appointment of adjutant of a Volunteer corps, after the departure of his regiment from India, shall continue to draw the regimental pay and allowances of his rank, in addition to the staff pay of the appointment. This ruling arose out of the action of the Pay Department in restricting an officer to the Staff Corps pay of his rank on the departure of his regiment from this country. The principle, however, is very clear, and we could not see how the Government of India could have ruled the point in any other way. An officer of a British regiment stationed in India is eligible for appointment to a Volunteer corps in this country as adjutant, and he is also eligible to continue in that appointment, up to five years, after the departure of his regiment from India. This means that he should receive the same pay, according to rank, throughout the five years. The Pay Department, however, sought to reduce his pay the moment his regiment left India, for what reason we are unable to tell. Fortunately, the Government of India has ruled otherwise.

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Under the authority of the Secretary of State for India, and in supersession of Special India Army Circular, dated the 28th June, 1889, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following rules for the tenure of appointments in the Judge Advocate-General's Department under the organisation of the department laid down in clause 96, India Army Circulars, 1888:—

I.—Judge Advocate-General in India.—The tenure of this appointment is limited to five years, subject to the condition that it must be vacated on succession to the colonel's allowance.

II.—Deputy Judge Advocates-General.—The tenure of these appointments is subject to the same conditions as the above, and to the further condition that they must be vacated on promotion to General Officer. A Deputy Judge Advocate-General promoted to be Judge Advocate-General in India will commence a fresh tour of five years' service from the date of assumption of the duties of the latter appointment.

Assistant Judge Advocates-General.—The first tenure of the appointments will ordinarily be limited to five years. Officers appointed in this grade subsequent to the date of this order will be posted to these appointments on the conditions following, viz., they will remain seconded in their regiments for the full term of five years, at the expiry of which they will either be confirmed permanently in the grade, or revert to regimental duty at their own request or on the recommendation of the head of the department. Assistant Judge Advocates-General will vacate their appointments on—

- (1) Succession to the colonel's allowance.
- (2) Promotion to major-general.
- (3) Attainment of 52 years of age.
- (4) Transfer to the unemployed Supernumerary List.

2. The tenure of appointments under this order will confer no extension of tenure upon those officers whose appointments were, previous to the reorganisation, of limited tenure.

A MADRASEE syce in the employ of the Maharajah of Vizianagram lately committed suicide in Calcutta by hanging himself with a piece of rope attached to the roof of a stable. The cause assigned for this deed was that he had not received for some time any letters from his relatives, and that he had a few days back been cheated out of his gold earrings.

SOME of the Bengali papers are expressing doubts whether Bengali eloquence was quite the best thing to send to England in the Congress cause. Thus the Indian Nation, remarking on Mr. Surendranath Bannerman's remark at Chelsea that England had bequeathed to India "the birthright of a free country," says:—"Birthright of a free country" is mere demagogic fustian, and we wish Mr. Bannerman had avoided it. But it is so difficult to change one's nature. Birthrights are dangerous things to speculate about. If they exist at all it is difficult to say what they are. That is the teaching of modern thinkers, and it is the a b c of modern political philosophy. Leaving political philosophy aside, it is the lesson of common-sense, of practical wisdom. And an English audience, Mr. Bannerman must know, appreciates common-sense better than rhetoric, though of course it will admire the rhetoric which flows from foreign lips.

THE INDIAN BOOKMAKER.

"Pelican," in Hayes' Sporting News, writes:—

Calcutta is his habitat, and he is much in evidence at the little meetings and gymkhanas in the suburbs. Dressed in the usual tasty combination of a night-shirt and bed-sheet that the Bengali affects, he gives himself a sporting appearance by adopting a "Europe gentleman's" coat and sachel. There is oil on his hair, his brow is wet with the sweat of doubtful honesty, and his speech is the babble of the fluent Babu. Third-class by rail and the shakiest of shaky ticca gharries take him to his destination, and arrived at the course he puts up a bit of black cardboard on a bamboo, the said board having his name on it. He gets up on an old spirit case, produces a piece of chalk, pins a slip of paper that has the names of the starters on it on to his board, and against each pony chalks a 1, by which he intimates to his clientèle that he is prepared to lay even money against any of the field of seven. Some one wants to back one of them, and before the bet is booked, the 1 is rubbed out with a grubby thumb, and the odds against that pony now stand at 6 to 4 on. Another five rupees will send the odds down to 2 to 1 on, and at twenty rupees his book against the horse is full. Some three ponies have been backed and stand at odds on; and as a great concession he offers to lay two to one against any of the others, a generous offer which finds no takers. Some are bolder than others, and a leviathan amongst them has been known to have as much as fifty rupees dependent upon one race. If the favourite romps in, their despair is quite hopeless; but if an outsider gets first past the post, their glee is as the glee of little children. I readily admit that your ready-money bookmaker at home has a very pretty talent for mispronouncing names; but he never gets within a couple of fields of our Bengali. Give the black man a good long classical name to play with, and he will get more permutations and combinations out of it than the most unprejudiced Birmingham rough could do.

As a welcher he is not a success; there is his weak point. There is something, after all, to admire in the English rough who passes the sachel to his pal and draws the chase across the open while the swag disappears. When he is run down and collared there is some fight in him, his mouth is full of blasphemy, and he can use his fists; but the Bengali goes on a different plan. At Barrackpore one of the gentry had the misfortune to become bankrupt before he had satisfied his creditors, and there was trouble; a couple of sticks were broken over somebody's head, some strong language in the vernacular was used, and eventually the bookmaker appeared outside the stand, being personally conducted by Tommy Atkins, to whom he owed "dibs." His demeanour was not worthy of his calling; he held up his hand in supplication, he explained with the volubility of a woman, and he wept tears of fright. Now a weeping bookmaker is not a pretty sight, though it is an unusual one. A tank is not a satisfactory place to duck a fellow man in, for it is shallow and the water warm; there is not the same joy to be got out of tearing a flimsy linen shirt as there is in dragging to pieces a black and white check coat; and to trample upon a black pot-hat or a whisp of linen is as nothing to the delight of kicking a tall white hat about the course. No, with every wish to speak well of him, the Bengali bookmaker has a lot to learn before he can become a satisfactory welcher.

There is a great future yet before the Native bookmaker. The divine instincts of a great nation longing for free institution, and murmuring as it feels the galling of the chains is behind him, and ere many of the ever-circling years have run down the changing groove of time, we may see Rammy Sammy and Co. in tall hats with green veils and pink blazers standing beneath the proud legend, "the same old firm and the same old pitch." N. Chunder Dass in a black and white striped overcoat and a straw hat with a IZ ribbon, will announce himself as the only Silver King; and Mr. S. Jabberjee wearing in his blue sombrero a card with Mr. Bull of Birmingham on it, will dispense tickets out of a sachel on which the royal arms and the membership of Tattersall's and the Victoria Club are displayed in gold.

DONKEY LYMPH.

Surgeon-Major J. A. Laing, Sanitary Commissioner, Madras, has forwarded to Government the following report by Surgeon-Major W. O'Hara, District Medical and Sanitary Officer, Bellary:—

"I have the honour to report, with reference to the above, that from a series of experiments the following results have been ascertained:—

(a) That the donkey can be readily inoculated with cow-pox. (b) That the disease so induced runs a course exactly analogous to that in the heifer. (c) That the virus is readily re-transmissible from the donkey to the calf. (d) That the virus is not altered by such transmission. (e) That donkey lymph used for human vaccination produces results exactly similar to vaccinia. (a) and (b) substituting a donkey for a calf and carrying out the same method of inoculation as in calf vaccination, it is found that an eruption exactly similar to cow-pox results. The disease is of the same duration, and presents the same characteristics. (c) If between the fifth and sixth days after inoculation lymph is taken from the vesicles and a calf is vaccinated, a normal attack of cow-pox ensues. (d) The cow-pox thus induced may be transmitted indifferently to calf or donkey with a certainty of the disease being propagated. (e) Lymph taken from a donkey and used for human vaccination produces results exactly similar to calf vaccination; the eruptive fever is neither more nor less severe, the local inflammation is the same, the character of the vesicles and cicatrices is identical, and the ailment is of the same duration.

"The advantages of employing donkey-lymph may be briefly summarised:—It is efficient substitute for calf-lymph. It is cheaper. It is useful for renovating calf-lymph employed through several generations. It may be used when calf-lymph cannot be procured. That it is an efficient substitute for calf-lymph may be inferred from its transmissibility, from its producing exactly similar results, and from its derivation. It is cheaper. That it is more economical is a great consideration: donkeys can be obtained in almost every village; they can be provided at a nominal cost, and on their feeding and care they are less expensive than calves. (c) Calf-lymph transmitted through several successive specimens of the same species is known to lose in strength and efficiency; this deterioration may be rectified by an admixture of human lymph. It is reasonable to suppose, and indeed experiment bears out the inference, that transmission of calf-lymph through the donkey will renovate the lymph and render it more effective in degree and duration. (d) The great drawback in maintaining animal vaccination throughout the year has been the difficulty in obtaining calves during the hot months, when fodder is scarce, and the cattle are driven to distant grazing grounds; the employment of donkeys in this interval will greatly help to tide over this difficulty.

"From inquiries made in several parts of the district, I am led to believe that the use of donkeys as lymph-bearers is not likely to be met with opposition by the people; and this view is strengthened by the fact that donkey's milk is used medicinally by Natives of all castes and classes. In conclusion I would merely add that the experiments were conducted as a private investigation, and at my own expense."

MISS HELEN GRANT has been appointed lady doctor in charge of the new Victoria Hospital for Women at Kotah, in Rajpootana.

We have been favoured by Mr. Martin Wool with Part III. Section 5 of "Things of India made Plain, or a Journalist's Retrospect." This is the continuation of a republication of contributions which appeared in the columns of a local contemporary some twenty years ago, dealing especially with the financial problems then as now troubling the repose of Finance Ministers. The ground covered is extensive, including the outlay incurred on the big barracks which were at that time being built up or tumbling down; Sir Richard Temple's Budget, and the deficit to which that financier, not yet within sight of his Bombay Governorship, had the misfortune to deal with; the Abyssinia Expedition, the Indian Debt and the advantages to India and to England of that Imperial guarantee which is not yet in sight. These and many other topics which, twenty years ago, filled a larger space in the politics of Bombay than the trifles which now occupy public attention, are all discussed with the freshness of that time. In the copious repertory now published the aim of the author is to evoke thought in the reader, and induce competent men to undertake the serious study of the problem of Indian finance, which are still what they were so many years ago—a source of alarm and perplexity. This end, so desirable not only in itself, but for the results which its attainment might lead to, would perhaps be more likely to be realised if the leading articles of the seventies were to be recast in the light of subsequent events, and brought up to date. The information to be found in these pages would not lose any of its value if it were reset in a work dealing with the present aspect of Indian affairs. The history of the costly barracks might point a moral, if told in connection with the free-handed expenditure on or beyond the frontier, on works which will probably be obsolete before they are finished; but to re-tell the tale of the costly barracks, as it was told at the time, without any reference to the subsequent fate of those structures, many of which are now abandoned to owls and bats, is to miss the moral of the story. This apart, however, there must be many old citizens of Bombay who will be glad to find in "A Journalist's Retrospect" reminiscences of controversies which in their day had a very vivid interest.—Bombay Gazette.

MR. EDWARD TERRY IN COLOMBO.

Ceylon is becoming the resort of theatrical celebrities. It was but the other day that Mr. Toole was here shaking hands with the Duke of Connaught, and now Mr. E. Terry—formerly of Gaiety fame and afterwards so successful in Sweet Lavender at Terry's Theatre, one of the prettiest little theatres in the Strand—is among us, having arrived here in the Nepaul from Calcutta. Mr. Terry is on a holiday excursion. He has leased his theatre till November to Miss Grahame, and is giving up the intervening months to tourists' pleasures, in the enjoyment of which he has the company of his wife and daughter, who are travelling with him. He left home at the end of January and has just "done" India, where he left work alone, he says, except for the fact that Lady Reay got him to sing there, and he sang once at a volunteer concert. The Freemasons of India, though, made a big fuss over him. He says: "I hold a pretty high office in Freemasonry—Grand Treasurer, you know—and I think I'm about the highest officer they have had through India lately, so they made a fuss over me." Asked what he meant to do while here, he said he was going up-country; but he had been invited out to dinner here to-morrow night, so he should not go up until Friday, when he should go to Kandy, and afterwards to Nuwera Eliya. He seemed rather glad than otherwise that the Gymkhana at Nuwera Eliya would be over before he got there—"the place won't be so full," was his observation in regard to it. He intends to stay here a fortnight, and he will go home in the Ganges. Soon after he gets home he means to go to Norway "to try the other extreme," said he: "the cold weather suits me, and I don't think this hot weather does." When asked if there was any chance of his performing in Ceylon, he said, "No; it is too hot." Our reporter remarked that there were many Freemasons' Lodges here, and he replied that he had heard they were not sitting just at the present time, though there was one at Kandy, he understood, that he might possibly make the acquaintance of. Speaking about his holiday tour, he said he had liked it, barring the heat. It was the first time he had been to India; but he thought everything was very pretty, and what he had seen so far in Colombo he considered particularly so. The "old man" in him showed itself when in leaving our representative, he said he meant to go and see the Sinhalese performance of As You Like It at the Floral Hall.—Times of Ceylon

A LARGE number of Persian mules have recently been purchased by the Commissariat Department, Rawalpindi, in connection with the mobilisation scheme of the first Army Corps.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, on Dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty, we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine, which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTANTIATED IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divline, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

'I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life.'—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 9th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 7th May; and from Calcutta to the 7th May.

THE Viceregal party having now arrived at Simla the usual round of gaieties have commenced.

THE Legislative Council is not likely to commence sitting at Simla for another month to come, and when it does open, the Session will probably be a quiet and unostentatious one.

THE Simla water supply continues to agitate the public mind in that station, and the deputation of a special officer to inquire into the matter has been declared in some quarters to be a farce, as the question of an extended water scheme has more than once been considered by the Municipality. Although the recent rains have in a small measure increased the flow into the reservoirs it is said that a short supply in the season is bound to occur.

THE question of constructing the Simla-Kalka Railway and converting the same into a State Railway is now being seriously considered by the Government of India. The cost is estimated at eighty lakhs, and it is likely that the scheme will be pushed on as quickly as possible.

UNTIL a Select Committee is formed in England and they summon witnesses no action will be taken by the Government of India with regard to the Uncovenanted Service.

THE Bengal-Nagpur line is expected to be completed by January next. Coal has been discovered on the line.

IN order to expedite the construction of the Mayavaram-Mutnupit Railway the Government of Madras has offered to supplement its guarantee fund.

AS an evidence of the pacification of the Chin country it is stated that the Forest Officers are now carrying out their explorations in the Laungshe and Yaw districts without escorts.

THE Assam Coolie Emigration Report will shortly be laid before the Government of India. It will be some time before it can be made public, as it will have to be submitted to the Secretary of State.

ALTHOUGH it has been announced that a railway is to be constructed into Cashmere, no definite arrangements have yet been arrived at. In all, four routes are proposed, each of which has been more or less reconnoitred, and it is not improbable that one of these will eventually be selected. There is, however, no reason to believe that any immediate action in the matter will be taken.

THE greater portion of the Cashmere army, now at Jummoo, will be moved to Gilgit as soon as the Pass is open, and their place will then be taken by the other troops.

THE chances of the Leper Bill being dealt with even next cold weather are believed to be remote for "want of a safe working hypothesis."

THE introduction of the new rifle in India will, it is understood, entirely depend on the capability of the powder works at Ishapore to turn out a suitable smokeless powder, similar to that about to be introduced at home.

THE captain of the British steamer Ensamere, which foundered while on a voyage to Calcutta, has been found guilty of negligence, and his certificate suspended for six months.

AN Indian Army Circular notifies that henceforward the designation of District Staff Officers, 1st and 2nd Class, will be changed to Assistant Adjutant-General and Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General respectively.

THE rumours recently current in Poona that Sir George Greaves, the new Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, would have to proceed to England owing to ill-health are unfounded. His Excellency has been one of the sufferers from influenza and its after-effects, but is now quite recovered.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces reached Naini Tal on May 3rd.

SIR JAMES LYALL was to lay the foundation-stone of the Albert Victor Memorial Hospital in Lahore before he leaves for the hills.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY was to leave Calcutta on the 13th inst. and travel to Cooch Behar. Thence he will proceed by way of Buxa to Jalpaiguri and Darjeeling. Everything had been arranged for the inauguration by him on the 14th instant of the Rungpur-Mahiganj drainage canal, but he has postponed his visit to Rungpur until September next.

COLONEL SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN arrived at Quetta on the 25th ultimo after a successful tour through the Zhob Valley. Sir Robert has left the best possible arrangements and instructions with the Political Agent there for carrying on the administration among a horde of marauders.

THE HON. MR. COLMAN MACAULAY, officiating Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government, who only arrived in Calcutta on Thursday morning, May 1st, on return from leave in England, died suddenly on Friday evening at the residence of Sir Alfred Croft, where he was staying. Mr. C. C. Stevens, Commissioner of Patna, will act as Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government during Sir John Edgar's absence on leave.

MR. J. H. TWIGG, Officiating Commissioner of Jhansi, proceeds on leave at the end of this month, his place being taken by Mr. A. B. Patterson.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BUDGEN, commanding the Bombay District, proceeds home immediately on six months' sick leave.

MAJOR MILEY, Controller of Military Accounts, Eastern Circle, Bengal, proceeds shortly to Simla on special duty. Colonel Rowlandson officiating for him in Calcutta, and Major Sawyer acting as Controller of the Western Circle.

THE Government of India have dealt by Resolution, published in the current Gazette, with the Report of the Committee which was investigating the subject of the Public Works Accounts through the greater part of last year. It is recognised by the Government that Mr. R. G. Macdonald and his colleagues have done a great deal to show where the over-elaborate system of accounts which was harassing the executive could be relaxed not only without risk, but with benefit to the public service. A schedule of thirty such points, whereon the recommendations of the Committee have been endorsed by the Government, is included in the Resolution, and there are others on which it has thrown useful light. The cordial thanks of the Government of India are given to Mr. Macdonald, the President, and Colonel Harvey and Mr. Corder, his colleagues, for the assiduity and ability with which they grappled the subject.

ON May 5th, at the Insolvency Court, Calcutta, an application for an interim protection order was made on behalf of General Rana Huruck Jung Bahadur, one of the sons of the late Sir Jung Bahadur, of Nepal. It was stated that his debts were contracted mostly for uniforms supplied by Calcutta firms at the time he was a Nepaulesse General in the Delhi Campaign. He was then in hopes that some of the property of his uncle, who was Prime Minister in Nepaul, would come to him. Subsequently he received a letter from the Foreign Office, saying that they could not hold out any hopes of the recovery of his property.

LORD HARRIS is winning golden opinions in official quarters by his systematic attention to the duties of office.

THE Indian Articles of War Amended Bill is expected to be issued within the next three months.

THE reason of the Amir's prolonged absence from Cabul is said to be a desire to demonstrate that his son Hubbi-bullah is capable of holding the reins of government.

THE Government have sent the following reply to the telegram from the Chamber of Commerce regarding the income-tax on consignments:—"What Government intended to convey was that its decision to assess income-tax on the profits on goods consigned to agents would not be reconsidered. At present the local authorities had already been instructed some time previously to cause the profits to be assessed, and the Government of India proposed to defer the further consideration of the matter, if further consideration should be found to be necessary, pending the receipt from the local revenue authorities of reports on the operation of the orders."

WITH regard to the alleged frauds upon the Banks of Bengal in Calcutta by Solomon, the Jewish speculator, the Government intend to prosecute the man for forgery of official documents connected with the opium system.

GOOD rain has fallen in Kumaon and Garhwal. This will relieve anxiety as to prolonged or severe distress in either province, though, until the autumn crops are cut, there will be in parts some scarcity of food-stocks, which will be met by importing grain. If the rainy season is normal all should have resumed its usual course by October.

THE production of Indian tea continues to increase rapidly. Last year the total yield amounted to over 102 million pounds, and this year it is estimated by the India Tea Association that it will amount to 13 millions more, of which it is calculated that 109 millions will be available for export to England.

THE scheme for the establishment of a system of Crown prosecution in the Punjab is at present before the Supreme Government. If the scheme is sanctioned, it is probable that four or five Crown prosecutions will be attached to various Session's Judges' courts in the province. It will, in that case, remain to be seen whether good men can be got for them at the necessarily low rate of remuneration to be offered.

INDIAN FORESTS.—According to the last official return on the subject, there were in India at the close of 1889 54,917 square miles of forest demarcated and reserved by the State. The area has increased, especially since 1877-8. In that year it was only 17,705 square miles; in the following year it amounted to 40,425 square miles, in consequence of the energetic operations carried on in the Central Provinces. These latter have now the largest area of reserved forests of any province in India. It amounts to 19,712 square miles, Bombay coming next with 10,236. The areas elsewhere are:—In Lower Burma, 5,111; Bengal, 4,988; Madras, 3,727; North-Western Provinces and Oude, 3,727; Assam, 3,447; the Punjab, 1,535, and Berar, 1,059 square miles.

THE CULTIVATION OF COCAINE.—The question of the feasibility of cultivating cocaine, which has lately come to be regarded as a most valuable drug, is thus discussed by a Calcutta paper:—"The supplies of the anæsthetic drawn from South America are limited, and the question now is, where can coca be grown at a profit? The Agri-Horticultural Society at Calcutta has for some time taken an interest in the subject, and many of its members in correspondence with it are trying experiments. There seems to be no difficulty whatever in getting the plant to grow at low elevations in the moist hilly regions of Assam, Ceylon, and Southern India. But unless the cheapness of Indian labour can bring down the cost rate of production materially lower than that which prevails in South America, pioneers of this new industry will only burn their fingers."

NOTES.

THE news from India this week is dull enough, whether it comes by wire or dak. The telegrams are to the effect that the inquisitorial and arbitrary powers which the officers of the Revenue are endeavouring to exercise under the authority of the extraordinary circular issued by the Collector of Income-tax to merchants and importers in Calcutta, may result in a general protest throughout the country against the further continuance against the income-tax itself—the most unpopular because the most unfair in its incidence which has ever been introduced into India.

BUT if anything could have been invented to add to the discontent always felt against this tax it was to be found in the Circular which conveys to merchants the intention of the Revenue Department to subject to taxation the profits of foreign consignors and incomes of men who neither reside in India nor directly carry on business there. How is an importer to ascertain the profits of his consignors? The Collector's circular asks him to make a guess at them, and put it down in his account sales. The Englishman points out what the probable result of this would be to the importer thus:—

"In the first place, the importer has no means of ascertaining the profits of his consignors, and, in the second, his opinion as to the probable profits made on consignments would be almost worthless. Thirdly, should he endeavour to assist the Revenue Department in its wild-goose chase after the taxable profits of foreign traders, he would risk the loss of his agency business; and, lastly, should he make the required deduction in his account sales, he would in every case find the item disallowed by the consignor." The Circular, in fact, places the importer between the "devil and the deep sea."

THE Circular as yet applies only to Calcutta, but the Press of the great commercial centres of Bengal and Bombay protest against it. Madras approves of it, but, then, little attention is paid to any opinion of Madras on commercial matters. The Englishman says that alarm and indignation have already been caused by the ill-advised attempt to extend the sphere of the income-tax operations; and the Bombay Gazette affirms that had the object been to create irritation on all hands, and to deal invidiously with one class and another, a more ingenious machinery for the purpose could not have been invented. But there is balm in Gilead—at least, for Bombay—for the same journal modestly adds:—"The Bombay Chamber of Commerce may be trusted to make such a representation to Government as will persuade them to withdraw from the unreasonable course upon which they have set out." Let Calcutta look to Bombay, and be grateful.

BOMBAY wisely never hides its own light under a bushel, although it often tries to extinguish lights belonging to other places. But there is no denying that the Western city is going ahead. Here is a proof of it from a local paper:—"The great meeting of mill hands in Bombay last Sunday was marked by a feature as pleasing as it was novel. After the secretary and several of the workmen had spoken, two female mill-hands stepped forward and addressed the meeting—one of them with an eloquence that makes a more than respectable figure in the published report, and elicited loud applause from the assembled multitude. Baya Luxmon may fairly boast that she at least has done her part to vindicate the claim of Bombay to the vaunted title of urbs prima in Indis. Nay, she may do more—she may claim to have done something, however small, to earn for India the title of terra prima in orbis terrarum. Where is the female mill-hand in Manchester or Oldham who can boast of such a feat as that recorded of her in the Bombay papers, or, if she attempted it, would acquit herself half as creditably?"

WHAT will Exeter Hall say to the following? A correspondent writes to the Indian Daily News:—"A Brahman of Bengal gave away his six aunts, eight sisters, and four daughters in a batch of altogether eighteen in marriage to one person, a boy less than ten years old. The brides of three generations were in age from above fifty to three months at the lowest. The baby bride was brought to the ceremony on a brass plate. Among the kulin Brahmins, as a rule, the man who receives in marriage the majority of the daughters of a family is also bound to have the rest; otherwise the minority must suffer a life-long celibacy. Hundreds of instances like the above may be given if needed." This is enough to unnerve even a Mormon Elder.

A REUTER'S telegram from Bombay, yesterday, says:—"Captain Durand, the British Agent at Gilgit, will leave shortly for Srinagar in order to confer with Lieutenant-Colonel Nisbet, the British Resident in Cashmere. A regiment of Cashmere Rifles will proceed to Gilgit on the 5th prox. It will be followed by an infantry regiment in August, and by artillery and another regiment later on, the troops reaching Gilgit by the end of the year. The Nawab of Rampore has offered to support a regiment of cavalry and one of infantry, and the Government will probably accept the offer."

It is reported in one of the papers by the present Overland Mail that "The Government of India having now arrived at Simla immediate steps will be taken to arrange for the amusements of the season." This is in keeping with the time-honoured traditions of the mountain, so we are therefore not surprised to learn officially from the Pioneer that "the Supreme Legislative Council is not likely to commence sitting at Simla for another month to come," and that "when it does open the Session will be a quiet and unostentatious one."

In the meantime, however, an influential amusement committee has been formed, and the theatrical season is to commence with the play of Uncles and Aunts. Whether it will end with equally innocent domestic relationships will depend very much upon what Mrs. Grundy has to say. But then we learn from one of "Our Special Correspondents" on the mountain that "Mrs. Grundy has been down with influenza, so there is not much gossip going the rounds." He promises, however to let his readers know when the old lady is well again. Possibly very soon.

For some days it rained like a deluge at Simla and among the lower hills, and travellers upwards are said to have found the journey anything but agreeable.

THE Admiral of the East India station intends to return to Bombay by the end of September, when it is very probable that some naval manoeuvres will be gone through in Bombay harbour. Some of the ships of the Indian Marine and the coast service vessels, Abyssinnia and Magdala, will take part, as well as the torpedo-boats.

OUT of sixty-nine collieries now being worked in India, observes the Englishman, it is surprising to find that no fewer than sixty-two are in Bengal. These employ a daily average of 25,000 hands, and supply Calcutta and the railways to the west as far as Lahore. During the ten years ending 1888, the output of Indian coal increased from 229 to 478 lakhs of maunds. During the next ten years the increase will probably be still more rapid. Upper Burma possesses on the Chindwin river coal mines of great extent and value, and may be expected before long to add considerably to the supply.

ALL true lovers of sport and horse-breeding in India will be rejoiced, says the Planters' Gazette, to see that Mr. Hallen is going home. His long and apparently, according to Government ideas, meritorious services certainly entitle this peculiarly ideal officer to decent recompense, and if some suitable billet could be found him in England to prevent the necessity of his returning to this country, India would be benefited and a worthy, though mistaken officer, put out of the way of doing further harm. A pretty little bit of sarcasm is served up on his management, by the order which has been lately passed, reducing the usual indent to England for stallions for the horse-breeding establishment by £1,000, which amount is very sensibly to be expended in the purchase of stallions available in the country itself. Thank goodness that ere it was too late the Government have realised the gross errors of the present administration.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 25.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has submitted a memorial to the Government protesting against the proposal to levy income-tax on the profits from the sale of goods consigned to agents by persons residing outside British India. The memorialists urge that agents have no means of estimating such profits, that an attempt to tax them will cause a great amount of trouble and correspondence, that it will give opportunity for evasion and fraud, and will be for all practical purposes a duty on imports. But the memorial does not stop there, for it goes on to challenge the income-tax generally as not suited to a country like India. It asserts that the Government has failed to make that tax either acceptable to the people, fair in incidence, or reasonably remunerative. Mr. Westland, late Finance Minister, is quoted in support of the statement that the collections from the cities of Calcutta and Bombay form more than one-fourth of the whole collections in India. It is added that complaints are becoming rife all over the country in regard to the working of the Act, and the result cannot fail to be serious discontent, which may lead to grave consequences. The special necessities which justified the re-imposition of the income-tax four years ago having now passed and the finances being prosperous, the Chamber prays the Government to take the subject of its continuance into consideration. It is understood that the Bombay Chamber is forwarding a similar protest, and that other public bodies will follow this example.

The latest returns published by the Financial Department show that the surplus of the year 1889-90 is likely to amount to Rs. 25,69,000, instead of Rs. 18,09,700, as stated in Sir D. Barbour's Budget speech. The greater portion of this improvement is due to savings in the expenditure, chiefly effected in England, but a portion is also due to the unexpectedly high receipts from land revenue and to an increase under various other heads.

Considerable doubt seems to be felt whether the Indian silver industry will profit by Mr. Goschen's reduction of the plate duties if hall-marking is made compulsory. The Indian Government has not yet made any announcement on the subject, but it is understood that it will strongly oppose compulsory hall-marking.

Attention has been again called to the urgent necessity of legislation in regard to leprosy by a sad incident that occurred in Bombay last week. A Hindoo leper was found dying in the street; the police removed him in a carriage to the hospital, but he was refused admission, and died in the carriage. The jury, at the inquest, expressed the opinion that a suitable asylum should be provided for lepers found ill in the public streets.

The trial of the three men charged with attempting to murder the Dewan of Cambay concluded on Monday. Two of them were sentenced to seven years' imprisonment; the third was acquitted.

Some excitement prevails among speculators regarding the prospects of opening up a goldfield which is alleged to exist at Sonapat, in the province of Chota Nagpore. Three companies have been brought out in Calcutta within the last few days, and it is probable that the work of prospecting will be actively undertaken at once.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 24.

Mandalay is rapidly decaying, and its trade is steadily diminishing. Founded as a residence for the King of Burma, enjoying no advantages of position, and mainly depending on the lavish expenditure of the Palace, it ceased to have any reason for existence when the Burmese monarchy fell. The recent repeal of the ruby regulations has temporarily revived trade in Mandalay, by allowing its principal business to be again carried on. Prior to the repeal of the ruby regulations more than half the population of Mandalay were directly or indirectly engaged in smuggling rubies.

General Gordon, C.B., commanding the Burma division, relinquishes his command next week. He is temporarily succeeded by Brigadier Wolseley. General Gordon enjoys great personal popularity in the province. During his command the following expeditions were organised and carried out by him:—In 1886 the country between the old frontier and Thayetmyo, which was greatly infested by dacoits and held by Boh Shwe, and his most trusted lieutenants, was subjugated, and Boh Shwe killed, by a force consisting of three columns. In 1887 a column, under Colonel Harvey, was sent against Sawlapaw to co-operate with General Collett. In 1888 a rebellion in the Tavoy and Mergui districts was quelled. In 1889 the Chin expedition, under Brigadier-General Symons, and the Tonhon expedition, under Lieutenant-Colonel Blundell, were planned and organised by General Gordon. All these expeditions terminated successfully.

Colonel Pole Carew, C.B., late military secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India, who is at present visiting Burma, met with a serious accident while elephant shooting in Pegu, wounding himself in the arm with his own rifle. He is now convalescent.

Captain Way, commandant of the Minbu battalion of military force, is reported to have fatally injured himself by falling down a precipice at Minbu.

Numerous deaths, surrenders, and captures of dacoits in various parts of the province are announced. The dacoit bands are now split up into petty gangs.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

CALCUTTA, MAY 22.

General Tregear, commanding the Chittagong column, marching from Dewagiri, reports that on May 20th a great meeting was held of Malliam-pai chiefs, who have given orders that raiding shall cease, and have arranged that tribal disputes shall be referred to the British political officer. Admission into the country is granted, and roads are to be efficiently maintained. The chiefs were much impressed with the contents of Fort Tregear.

CALCUTTA, MAY 25.

A telegram from Fort Tregear states that all the chiefs of the Mollienpui tribe assembled there on the 18th inst. to hear the orders regarding the settlement of the country. These orders are:—First, raiding is to stop and all disputes are to be referred to the political officer. Second, British officers are always to have admission into all the villages. Third, each village is to maintain the roads in its vicinity. The chiefs promised obedience. They were much pleased by being shown some telescopes and the working of the heliograph.

The garrison are now busy completing the fort and building huts for the rainy season.

THE MURDER OF MR. DALGLEISH.

BOMBAY, MAY 23.

The Pathan who murdered Mr. Dalglish is now in the hands of the Russian authorities at Samarcand. He will probably be extradited and tried at Ladak. The murder was committed on Cashmere territory. The Chinese offered no assistance in capturing the murderer, but the Russians took prompt action in apprehending him.

THE SHAN-SIAM BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

CALCUTTA, MAY 25.

The Shan-Siam Boundary Commissioners, since their return to India, have completed the work of mapping the country and laying down the boundary recommended. Nothing more can be done till the Home and Siamese Governments open negotiations for the actual demarcation of the frontier.

PROTESTS AGAINST THE INCOME TAX.

(“DAILY NEWS” TELEGRAMS.)

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

The attempt to levy income-tax on consignors' profits from imported goods is strongly opposed. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has submitted a memorial to the Viceroy declaring that the attempt will inevitably create friction and discontent, and place a premium on dishonesty. The occasion is taken advantage of to attack the income-tax generally, and the Chamber asks for a repeal on the ground that it is unpopular and unjust. This is an expression of views which are shared by large numbers both of Natives and Europeans.

Mr. Bradlaugh's mention in the House of Commons of the Jessore dispute has given rise to a protest here against the tendency to bother Parliament on questions pending the decision of the local authorities. Several Native newspapers declare that agitation of this kind is overdone, and that the Government deserves greater confidence. The Jessore ryots appear to have been influenced by agitation to behave foolishly.

In his resolution on the Report of the Health Officer for the Port of Calcutta, Sir Steuart Bayley passes a well-deserved eulogy on the late Dr. Vincent Richards, as “a zealous, energetic, and efficient officer.” This is a tribute which will be fully endorsed by the many who regret Dr. Richards' untimely death.

NATIVE GENTLEMEN AND THE ARMY.

(Madras Mail.)

Of the many deputations which waited upon the Duke of Connaught before that esteemed Prince left Bombay, the most interesting from a military point of view, must have been that of the representatives of the old fighting families of the Deccan, and, what the father of our late Governor comprehensively defined as “Maharashtra,” or land of the Mahrattas. The Sirdars professed that they had long felt as a hardship their practical exclusion from military service under the Queen-Empress; that they had heard with joy of the proposal to start a kind of Indian Sandhurst as a training College for Native officers; and that, with a view to assisting towards its practical realisation, they had raised funds for its endowment. What they asked was that, should their hope be fulfilled, and the College ever become an accomplished fact, the Prince would permit it to be called by his name, as a memento of his popular tenure of the command of the Bombay Army. His Royal Highness in reply stated that the object which the Sirdars had at heart had long had his sympathy, and that it would give him great pleasure to have the College, were it ever started, called after him. He reminded his hearers, at the same time, that in such matters local Administrations were powerless, and that the Supreme Government only could grant their prayer; and he advised them, as the surest way of being heard, to look well to their subscription list, and approach that Government with the assurance of a fair amount of pecuniary support. He then took a cordial farewell of the gentlemen who had waited upon him; and there, so far, the matter rests.

The Sirdars said that they and their sons were excluded from seeking a military career in Her Majesty's army which they most desired, because they could not, with proper respect to their positions, enlist, and obtain a commission by passing through the ranks, while the number of direct commissions granted was so small that it scarcely affected them. In the British Army, many well-born youths enlist in the hope of working their way through the ranks to a commission, and they suffer no moral degradation from the fact. Service in the ranks does not invariably improve the manners or ideas of the gentleman who has undergone it, and many are bound never to reach the goal of their desires; but at least there is no social objection to their enlisting, and they lose nothing in the esteem of themselves or of others by doing so. Native gentlemen have not yet reached this stage of emancipation, and it may perhaps be regretted. It has been brought about amongst Englishmen by the keen struggle for existence, which ensures that only the fittest shall survive; and Native gentlemen, by declining to enter into competition with those of their countrymen less highly connected than themselves, are necessarily passed by the latter in the race for Government employment. The fact may be deplored, but has to be admitted. One result which may have ensued, and to which the Sirdars drew attention, is that the natural leaders of the people, being thus consigned to inactivity, have no inducement for bringing to the Army such personal retainers and other often desirable recruits as would follow them were they in Her Majesty's service. It being the mission of the Pioneer to urge that no good thing, in a military sense, can come out of Southern India (or indeed, any other part of the peninsula except the Punjab and the frontier), that paper has been at pains to endeavour to depreciate this aspect of the question. But the proposition of the Deccani chiefs is, on the face of it, an eminently reasonable one. “You cry out a deal,” they say, “about the difficulty of getting good recruits; enable us to serve in the Army, and we will bring you them.” There can be little doubt that, were these gentlemen given commissions, they would be as good as their word, and would bring with them many men who would be valuable additions to Her Majesty's forces. It may be true indeed, that, since the establishment of the British Government, neither they nor their fathers have indulged in promiscuous throat-cutting—a pastime still available upon certain portions of our frontiers; but there are compensations even to be found in that, and the Sirdars' followers might confidently be expected to provide the stuff of which good soldiers are made.

Happily, or unhappily, as the question may be viewed, there are a great many difficulties in removing to any appreciable extent the disabilities under which these Native gentlemen protest that they lie. Service in the Indian Army has always been based upon the assumption, theoretically shared in the French, that every recruit may find a commission in his knapsack. There is nothing to prevent a well-conducted and fairly educated man from rising from sepoy to Subadar, irrespective of his family or connections. Nor can such a state of things be regarded as alien to the Native temperament, for it has always existed in India, and at least half the great

Generals and Sovereigns with whose names and exploits her history abounds, were men who rose from the lowest positions to the highest. Many of them were originally slaves, or the sons of slaves. Every sepoy, therefore, who enlists beneath the British colours knows that it rests to a great extent with himself whether he will remain always a private soldier, or attain the commissioned grades; and an abolition, or even serious limitation, of the latter possibility would prejudicially affect recruiting. Some of the best, because the most ambitious, men would be lost. It is natural that the Sirdars should not have given its due prominence to this aspect of the matter; but, in considering their claims, it has to be remembered "Indian Sandhursts" have long been advocated by thoughtful soldiers, and the hope may be entertained that they will sooner or later (particularly sooner) be established. Native gentlemen will then have greater facilities than at present for entering Her Majesty's service; but it does not appear to be within the bounds of feasibility, so far as they can be surveyed, that the existing principle of granting commissions to deserving Non-Commissioned Officers will be more than slightly modified. If it ever is, the entire basis of the service will have changed, and, something else will have to be found to be sufficiently alluring to recompense the recruit for the chance which he will thereby have lost of winning commission.

A RUBY CONFUSION.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

There is a good deal of uncertainty abroad as to how far the abolition of certain rules by which sales of rubies have been hitherto restricted is true. After Sir Lepel Griffin's visit to the Ruby Mines, it is alleged he said, "the great difficulty of the company was smuggling. No good rubies reached the company's agents under the existing rules, which compelled the miners to dispose of stones to the company, or sell them by public auction, paying the company 30 per cent. on the valuation. With the approval of the Government the existing rules will be abolished, and a free market for the sale of rubies established by a limited number of miners, who will pay fees estimated to produce £15,000 yearly." It has since been decided, we believe, that the rules referred to are to be abolished, and rubies may be found and sold free of all penalties for so doing.

The Natives believe that all Ruby Regulations have been abolished, and that anyone can go out, find rubies, and sell them to anyone who will buy them, regardless of the feelings of our revenue-loving-and-wanting Government. The extent to which ruby restrictions have been removed have, so far as we know, not been published, so that no one can know exactly what the changes are in respect to the trade in rubies. The only matter known to a certainty about the ruby trade is, that the Ruby Mines Company have leased out a certain portion of their grounds to several hundreds of Burmese lessees, about five hundred in number. These lessees pay the company Rs. 20 per head, and thus yield the company a capitation revenue of something like a lakh of rupees annually. These Burmese lessees are not restricted, in anyway; they can find as many rubies as they like, and sell to the company, but not compulsorily. Everyone concerned in this company will be glad to hear of its abandonment of a policy under which, it had to be confessed, that "no good" rubies reached the company's agents. When the last mail left England the shares of the Ruby Mines Company were being quoted in London at nine-sixteenths to eleven-sixteenths premium, and no wonder.

It may be just as well if the revenue authorities would vouchsafe and cast abroad some definite knowledge of the scope of the changes contemplated or made in respect to the ruby trade.

INDIA'S INDUSTRIES.

(Madras Times.)

Although India has been an agricultural country for centuries past, and is likely to remain so for centuries to come, it is interesting to note the progress made in the introduction of Western industries. Some of these appear to have ousted ancient Indian industries, which have become nothing but a memory. Other Eastern arts are giving way day after day before the steady pressure of the machinery of the West, and even though attempts are made from time to time to save this industry from extinction, or to restore to that its former prestige, the position, broadly speaking, is that the future of India has more concern with modern than with ancient industries. We may, therefore, leave the latter aside while we touch upon some of the chief modern industries which tend to develop India's prosperity, agricultural as well as industrial. Without extensive railway communications not much could have been done, but gradually, and at the same time rapidly, these have been supplied, and railways have assisted manufactures, only to be stimulated by these in turn.

There were in work in India last year 108 cotton mills, containing 22,156 looms and 2,669,922 spindles. Additions have since been made to these; but as the new mills cannot conveniently be taken into account, it may be better to confine ourselves to the figures for 1888-89. The mills above referred to consumed about 347 million pounds of cotton in the year, and found employment for a daily average number of about 53,317 men, 18,031 women, 15,309 young persons, 3,669 children, a total of over 90,000 persons. Much of the capital employed is British, but the good done to this country must be estimated by the amount of cotton consumed and turned into yarn and cloth, as well as by the number of persons withdrawn from less profitable employment in agriculture to industrial labour. The progress made in the extension of cotton spinning has been rapid, and yet steady, and there is reason to hope that the future will provide as good things in this direction as have been supplied by the past.

Jute and Hemp mills are of less importance in the aggregate, and have a more local interest, the sphere of operations being almost entirely confined to Bengal. Nevertheless, the industry has been pushing ahead, and there were working last year 25 jute mills and hemp mills, employing a daily average of 59,722 persons viz., 37,755 men, 12,514 women, 5,720 young persons, and 3,733 children. About 188,061 tons of jute were worked up and 1,786 tons of hemp. Jute spinning is not quite so old as the cotton industry in this country. It reflects on Bengal enterprise, while its rival is more the outcome of the energy of Bombay. In the small woollen industry we find one more particularly adapted to the capacities of Cawnpore, though Bangalore has long maintained a fair place in the running. Woollen mills have been improving the quality of their output, and so also have Paper mills, which have met, to some extent, a long felt want, and which now seem to be embarked on a prosperous career. No less important than these is the work of India's breweries, which brewed in 1888-89 about 5,165,138 gallons. Of this quantity about 3½ millions were bought by the Commissariat; so that, like the Woollen industry, brewing may almost be said to be indirectly subsidised by Government, which gives a preference to country productions as compared with English. Last on the list of important industries that come before the public in large lots, so to speak, are the Collieries. These have an annually increasing output, which has now reached near 1½ million tons. Bombay and Sindh head the list easily.

But, leaving aside Gold-mining and other industries belonging almost entirely to Native States, there are still many other large industries, which, though they may be split up into many small portions, have an important influence on India's trade. There are many Indigo factories in various parts of India; Coffee works, cotton and jute presses, flour mills and iron foundries, lac factories and oil mills and wells; potteries and quarries, silk mills, sugar factories and tanneries, lend their aid in developing the natural resources of the country. Timber mills and rice mills play an important part, especially in Burma; and rope works, saltpetre refineries and tobacco factories deserve special mention. Cotton presses have to deal with produce amounting in value to some 11 crores of rupees, jute presses and rice mills each account for about 6 crores, Indigo factories for 3, and Coffee works for 2 crores. The figures given are sufficient to show that India's industries are of great importance, and it may be added that year after year sees an increase in their extent.

GERMAN TRADE WITH INDIA.

(Madras Times.)

While England, from time to time, notices Germany's growing trade with India, and while English traders comment upon this with more or less insight into the real condition of things, German newspapers continue to urge their countrymen to make a bold bid for the East Indian trade. Said a Hamburg contemporary a short time ago:—"While we take the trouble with great sacrifice of valuable lives and gold to found colonies and protectorates which for the first decade at least can hardly be weighed in the scales as consumers of German goods, we have never really given proper attention to the most important mart in the world, the East Indies, which far exceeds even the United States of America in respect of its consumption of European wares." Ex pede Herculem. There are sufficient facts before us to justify the belief that the opinion thus expressed by one of our Teutonic contemporaries is shared by a good many others. Statistics quoted by German writers show that Great Britain turns over fifty-two million pounds sterling in her export trade to India where Germany shows but the unimportant amount of £160,000. And German observers note also, that year after year India's trade is steadily increasing. German trade with India shares this increase, perhaps even in undue proportion, but still it is thought that direct communications between the two countries might be extended. There is no question that Germany's indirect trade with India reaches a much greater amount than that.

mentioned above, and the demand is now raised at Hamburg, "Why need we do this business through Great Britain: could we not develop it more satisfactorily direct?" The rapid extension of railway communications in India has attracted attention elsewhere than in this country and in England, and the long list of India's productions and the short list of her productions on an enormous scale, such as Cotton, Tea, Indigo, Jute, Rice, Wheat, &c., have not been overlooked. It is realised that the capabilities of India are indefinitely great, and notwithstanding her little by-play in East Africa, Samoa, and elsewhere, Germany keeps her eye on this country, and reflects on the possibility of getting an increased share of the enormous trade now doing and constantly growing.

Our rivals have been making a close study of the ground. They are beginning to open their eyes to the potentialities of the future, and they do not fail to notice that India is no new country where commercial centres have yet to be opened, but an old one, in which large towns are already visible, all important trade centres. The census of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras is noted, and it is observed how many other towns there are worthy to be included under the head of "important." And not content with what is or was, our competitors compare the two, and draw conclusions regarding the future. In five years an import of one and a-half million pair of shoes and slippers into India is noticed, and four and a-half-million umbrellas are seen to have been in requisition in one year alone. From this the Teuton draws the conclusion that Western influence has been working successfully, and he surmises that the development noticed in one branch of trades may yet be visible in many others. And yet our German contemporaries have not contented themselves with surmises, nor have they confined their observations to the particular articles of trade specified above. True, they have stated no new facts, drawn no novel conclusions. But what they have done is this, they have called public attention in Germany to facts well known in this country and in England, so well known, indeed, as to be now regarded in many quarters almost with indifference. Our reference to German observations is made in the hope of arousing our countrymen to the fact that others besides themselves see how the trade of this country is capable of being developed. The field will not be left free to Englishmen alone, and it must be remembered that each new year of late has seemed to show German competition as more powerful than in the year gone by. Trade nowadays depends less than it once did upon considerations of loyalty or patriotism. Sentiment has given place to utilitarianism. The cheapest wares and the best adapted to consumers' requirements are certain to come to the front, be they English or German, French or Russian. If England wishes to retain the lion's share of the trade of India, she must push ahead energetically, never lagging on the way, never neglecting the study of contemporaneous progress, and never failing to learn the lessons that are taught by the actions and suggestions of her competitors. It would be easy to adduce statistics to prove that even in India, the great stronghold of her trade, England has not maintained her ground free from increasing encroachments on the part of Germans.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MR. EVANS AND THE BEER.

(Pioneer.)

Mr. H. J. Whympier, of the Murree Brewery Company, has sent us a letter which is likely to prove something of a bomb in the camp of the teetotal party. Mr. Whympier begins by citing a letter from Mr. Evans, which appeared in an Indian newspaper, and in which the reverend gentleman expressed his sorrow and amazement that the pages of the paper should be polluted by advertisements of the drink traffic. "It was a pleasure," wrote Mr. Evans on this occasion, "to find one newspaper from principle shaking the drink traffic out of its pages, and is it not possible that the notice now alluded to is put in by mistake?" Mr. Whympier then goes on to say:—

"At the present time the Murree Brewery Company is, I believe, the largest subscriber to the Army Temperance Association, being convinced the brewing interest distinctly benefits by temperance, as opposed to intemperance, but it naturally does not believe in total abstinence being good for all. Last year it received the following letter:—

THE ARMY TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION,

Simla, 24th September, 1888.

H. J. Whympier, Esq., Murree Brewery Company, Gore Gully.

Dear Sir,—I have the pleasure to send you a copy of the Simla Herald, a paper started here for the purpose of assisting the funds of this association, and to solicit the favour of your very kindly supplementing your liberal donation of Rs. 500 by giving us a permanent advertisement of your company's ales, &c., for the Simla Herald. The rate will be for a whole page, any position you like, Rs. 50 per mensem. For half-page Rs. 35 per mensem. I send you a specimen copy of the paper, which circulates largely in the hill stations surrounding Simla where troops are kept, such as Kasauli, Subathu, Solon, Jutogh, Dugshai, and also in Umballa, besides a liberal local circulation.

The Simla Herald is the mainstay of our Press, for which I appeal to your generosity in the interests of the association.—Yours truly,

ATTLEEN WALKER,

Off. Hon. Treasurer, A. T. Association.

"In response to this invitation the Company gave the Army Temperance Association a full-page advertisement, a copy of which I have to-day forwarded to your Manager to insert as an advertisement, by way of explanation of this letter, in the issue in which you publish this communication or in which you note the facts given in it.

"The advertisement in question has appeared in every issue of the Army Temperance Association organ since November last, and it is incredible it can have escaped Mr. Evans' notice. He poses as an apostle of temperance and claims a full acquaintance with Indian temperance affairs, yet he takes an ordinary newspaper to task for publishing a 'drink' advertisement, whilst one of his own pet papers deliberately touts for brewers' custom. If Mr. Evans is unaware of this, surely it is time he made himself acquainted with his own affairs before he tries to put those of other persons straight.

"If Mr. Evans honestly thought the first advertisement wrong, where does his honesty come in when he shuts his eyes to similar advertisements in his own party's chief paper? The answer is possibly to be found in a letter which I do not like to exactly quote from; it is dated January 25th last, and is cautiously headed 'Private and Confidential—without prejudice,' but I may say it advises me in great detail that temperance funds are so low that an advance payment for the company's advertisement would greatly assist the association.

"A mild retort is perhaps allowable regarding 'pollution' and 'principle,' for if Mr. Evans is to be taken as a representative of his party, what I now publish, and other matter which I hold in reserve, goes to show that teetotal purity and principle apparently lie in abusing the brewer, whilst with tongue in cheek a hand is held out for his money—to lie in condemning what is termed the 'traffic in drink'—and whilst announcing the encouraging and increased support received to write privately, confidentially and without prejudice to the drink dealer that the Temperance show can hardly continue to be run unless he can advance a few of the rupees he has obtained by the sale of alcohol.

"Which party is the most polluted, that which deals openly and honestly in malt liquor, whilst contributing liberally to the Temperance cause, or that which agitates and acts as herein described?"

THE NATIVE AGITATOR IN ENGLAND.

(Pioneer.)

The Congress party were well advised to transfer their agitation to England for a time. In India the Babu orator is too well known. The silent millions in whose name he professes to speak remain obstinately silent and indifferent. They only pay eighteenpence a head in taxes all round, which is not much compared with the two pounds a head paid in England; and they distrust the Babu, and find him expensive when they come in contact with him; so that, despite his inflammatory pamphlets, which they cannot read, they continue apathetic and unconvinced. His vanity is naturally hurt by this want of appreciation in his own country, and one can sympathise with him in his mental distress. The stupid silence of those silent millions, the open hostility of the Musalmans, the scornful contempt of the martial Sikhs and Rajputs must, indeed, be exasperating. Therefore the Babu is perfectly right to convey himself and his warfare to England. "He shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, it's no great matter there," and he will, at any rate, be a novelty for the nonce.

But in entering on a campaign in England the Babu will gradually learn that he is fighting under new conditions. Out here his one great difficulty has been to get an audience of a decent size with patience enough to listen to him. If he got such an audience, the fact in itself implied a certain amount of success. The common folk have taken his measure in their own rude way; they do not trouble to go and listen to him; they pass him by, and let him talk. "The Babu talks," say they, "and the hot wind howls, but the first rain comes silently." In England, however, he will have no difficulty in getting an audience; for England, especially middle-class England, in the evening when the shops are shut, is something like Athens in the days of St. Paul: "All the Athenians and the strangers sojourning there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or hear some new thing." One result, however, of this disposition is that people can stand a great amount of public speaking and oration without being moved to anything beyond the customary resolutions of condolence and sympathy. The Hungarian patriot Kossuth, the Italian patriot Gavazzi, created enthusiasm which was apparently overwhelming and irresistible; but each left England disappointed and embittered at his final want of success. An English audience is always ready to pass verbal resolutions; but it is a long march from passing a resolution to passing an Act of Parliament.

CONGRESS THE ENEMY OF SOCIAL REFORM.

(Pioneer.)

The case between the Congress and the missionary stands thus. The Congress is the silent enemy of social progress and reform; the missionary is its open friend. The Congress acknowledges, indeed, the need for social reform, but pleads that such reform is beside its present scope. It admits that Mr. Malabari's movement for allowing the re-marriage of widows is in need of help from all high-minded Hindus, but it does nothing, and it dares do nothing. It sees the sensible reforms introduced by the Chiefs of Rajputana for cutting down the old ruinous scale of marriage expenses but it shrinks from expressing its approval. It regards the system of infant marriage—a system pregnant with evils which shock the civilised world—but it regards it without a word of expressed disapprobation. These are all matters in which the Congress could do a noble work if it would; and they are all matters in which its aid has been invoked, and has been refused. The fact is that any attempt at social reform would at once split the Congress into atoms; it can only remain united so long as it remains an enemy to all such reform. It would be absurd to suppose that all the aspirants after representative government are dead to the necessity of reforming a social state which is too alien and barbarous for Englishmen at home readily to comprehend; it is merely that they are not ready themselves to incur the odium of attempting the necessary reform. Whatever now hinders them, to quote the old lexicographer, from doing that which their reason and conscience declare necessary to be done will equally obstruct them in time to come. Good and evil are in real life inseparably united; habits grow stronger by indulgences; and reason loses in dignity in proportion as she has oftener yielded to temptation. "He that cannot live well to-day," says Martial, "will be less qualified to live well to-morrow." It cannot be too strongly asserted that the Congress on its present platform is not only the enemy of social reform among the Hindus, but that its enmity is likely to become the more uncompromising.

AFRIDI SOLDIERS.

(Pioneer.)

After the splendid service done by the Afridis of the Khyber Rifles in the Black Mountain Expedition, it was only natural that the military authorities should consider the advisability of again recruiting freely from among those fine hill-men. During the Afghan war, when our troops came into conflict with many of the tribes along the border land, there were desertions among the trans-frontier Pathans in the ranks, and stringent orders were issued that no more of these men were to be enlisted. Certain regiments had Afridi companies at that time, while in others there were representatives of nearly every race in Afghanistan. In some cases of desertion the sepoy could plead a certain amount of justification. News reached them that their villages had been attacked and destroyed, that their families were in sore distress, and that their presence was urgently required in their own country. They could not be granted leave in war time, and they consequently fled secretly back to their hills, in many instances leaving their rifles and ammunition behind them. There were, of course, a number of bad characters who proved untrue to their salt, but we are glad to believe that these were in the minority. It had always been foreseen that some desertions must take place with Native troops operating against their own kith and kin, and the wonder was that the number was not much greater in 1878-80. Since that time the Afridis, who are by far the most powerful and warlike tribe, have come to a great extent under the influence of our political officers, and their behaviour has been exceptionally good. They have fulfilled all their obligations in the Khyber, and the Rifles of the Pass are as loyal as any regiment of the regular army. Taking advantage of the good understanding which now exists with the tribe, the Government of India have just issued orders for the formation of new Afridi companies in certain selected regiments. These are the 21st, 24th, and 26th Punjab Infantry, and the 4th and 5th Infantry of the Punjab Frontier Force. Two companies will be added to the 26th Punjab Infantry, and one company to each of the other battalions. These will be in addition to the present establishment of eight companies. There should be no difficulty experienced in obtaining the 600 Afridis required, and if more recruits offer than can be at once absorbed, new companies might be added to other regiments which have Pathans already in their ranks. Considering the recruiting difficulties which are now being met with in India itself, it is time to draw more largely upon the almost inexhaustible supply of first-class fighting material in the Kohistan beyond our North-West border.

BENGAL.

MR. C. C. STEVENS, Commissioner of Patna, will act as Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government during Sir John Edgar's absence on leave.

THE Englishman hears that the difficulties which have arisen in connection with the Assam-Chittagong scheme are of so serious a nature as to threaten the project with shipwreck.

Good rain fell in Kumaon and Garhwal on Saturday and Sunday of last week. This will take the edge off any anxiety as to prolonged or severe distress in either province, though, until the autumn crops are cut, there will be in parts some scarcity of food-stocks which will be met by importing grain. If the rainy season is normal all should have resumed its usual course by October.

A QUESTION has lately been raised in Bengal regarding the exemption from municipal taxes of Ruling Chiefs visiting stations either in the hills or the plains of India; but it has been decided to maintain the practice now in force in the respective provinces. As it does not appear that any Ruling Chiefs have ever been exempted from municipal taxes in the Punjab, they will, we suppose, continue to pay.

MR. JAMES W. FURRELL has resumed editorial charge of the Calcutta Review. Mr. Thomas Smith, the publisher, is to be congratulated on having secured the services of so able and experienced a litterateur. Under Mr. Furrell's editorship the continued prosperity and high tone of the Review is assured.

OUT of sixty-nine collieries now being worked in India it is surprising, says the Englishman, to find that no fewer than sixty-two are in Bengal. These employ a daily average of 25,000 hands, and supply Calcutta and the railways to the west as far as Lahore. During the ten years ending 1888, the output of Indian coal increased from 229 to 478 lakhs of maunds. During the next ten years the increase will probably be still more rapid. Upper Burma possesses on the Chindwin river coal measures of great extent and value, and may be expected before long to add considerably to the supply.

MADRAS.

THE HOUSELESS COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The anomalous position of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief at this station (Ootacamund) calls, says the South Indian Observer, for a few remarks. The former has a palatial residence constructed and fitted at great cost; the latter has to flit from this to that house, whether suitable or not. To our certain knowledge this change of residence has occurred three times, and be it remembered that the Governor is here for only a portion of the year, while the Commander-in-Chief makes the station his head-quarters, or, in other words, his permanent abode. Besides this, there is something so undignified in the second magnate of the Presidency, the first in his own department, wandering about the station in search of a residence, and taking the first that offers from sheer necessity. If it is essential that the Governor should have a house, known to the public at large as "Government House," so is it essential, we think, that the chief military forces of the Presidency should have a house equally well known as the "Commander-in-Chief's" house. Such a designation existed in Madras for well nigh an age, and it was a beacon to strangers, who otherwise would have had to wander over the suburbs inquiring for the residence of his Excellency. Even in military stations there is the Commandant's house reserved for the officer who fills or occupies that position, and pointing at once to the spot where that officer should be interviewed. In Ootacamund you have to search for the C.C.'s house as you would for a pin in a bundle of hay, thus reducing the prestige of the occupant to that of Browns, Jones, and Robinson.

MR. MOSS, the Traffic Manager of the Madras Railway, and Mr. Conder, the Traffic Manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, have submitted to their respective boards certain proposals for the acceleration of the mail trains between Madras and Bombay, and Bombay and Madras, which, if approved by the boards and sanctioned by the Madras and Bombay Governments, should be very acceptable to the travelling public. At present the mail train for Bombay leaves the Madras terminus at the inconveniently early hour of 5 P.M., and is due at Bombay at 10.45 A.M. on the second day afterwards—a journey of 41½ hours. By the time that one has claimed one's luggage, driven to an hotel, secured a room, and had a tub, the best part of that second day has gone. It is proposed that the train shall leave Madras at 6 P.M., and reach Bombay on the second day at 7.30 A.M., a journey of 37½ hours. Thus the duration of the journey would be diminished by as much as 4½ hours, and none of the second day would be wasted. As regards the train from Bombay to Madras, it is proposed that it shall leave the Victoria Terminus at 9.15 P.M. instead of at 2 P.M., and arrive in Madras at 8 A.M. instead of at 6.15 A.M. The proposed hour of departure is, it may be thought, rather too late, and if 8.15 P.M. were substituted, the train might presumably arrive at 7 A.M., instead of at the less convenient 8 A.M. But this is a mere detail. To enable these changes to be carried out the mail train will not be able to stop at ten of the smaller stations between Madras and Raichore; the train-load must be reduced from about 17 to about 12 vehicles; and the fare for third-class passengers travelling by the "limited mail" will have to be increased from 2 to 3 pies per mile. To meet, however, the convenience of the great majority of third-class passengers who are not in a hurry, the local day passenger trains now running between Madras and Cuddapah would be extended through to Raichore. Corresponding changes would be carried out on the Bombay side. Not the least of the benefits that should result from the rearrangement of the time-table would be that the overland mails, which now sometimes arrive in Bombay too late to catch the train for the south, would be less likely to be detained in Bombay. It is a very old complaint that the journey from Madras to Bombay and vice versa is made far more tedious than it need be by the frequent stoppages, and long halts at insignificant stations, where, as a rule, no one seems to alight, and no one seems waiting to enter the train. The present scheme will remove the cause for this complaint, will promote the convenience of travellers, and will facilitate postal communication between the two presidencies. It is a move in the direction of judicious progress that we hope will be carried out at an early date.—Madras Mail.

BOMBAY.

LORD HARRIS is winning golden opinions from all the officials for his excellent methods of business. He has fixed days and hours for each of the secretaries, and the papers are promptly and thoroughly gone into and disposed of, and, in the event of further light being required, put aside for the consideration of the Council. There is a regular Council-day every Friday, and all outstanding matters are then brought forward, sifted, and decided. Lord Harris is said to show great fairness in hearing both sides, and great capacity for separating the real practical issue from its accidental circumstances, and a determination always to have all facts laid before him with perfect accuracy.

THE Indian Marine surveying steamer Investigator arrived on Wednesday morning from Colombo, which port she left on the 29th April last. She hauled twice en route with great success in 1,000 and 740 fathoms respectively, this being the first time the deep sea trawl had been used in this part of the Indian Ocean. The Investigator believes she has obtained evidence of the existence of vegetable life at great depths, and, if the opinion is verified, the discovery will prove one of considerable importance. During the season the Investigator worked round the Laccadive Islands and Cocos Island in the Bay of Bengal, while she systematically surveyed the Madras coast from Gopalpore to Bhimlipatam—a distance of about 140 miles—and re-surveyed the dangerous Pulicat shoals, just north of Madras. Despite the opposition which at times was experienced, the deep sea trawling was very successfully carried out by the aid of the new machine and gear. The Investigator will, as usual, remain in Bombay during the monsoon.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Governor has consented to give a cup value Rs. 1,000 to be run for at the Poona races. It will be the third race on the third day (Tuesday, 23rd September), and will be for all Arabs, Bombay and Nizam's Dominions' C.B.'s, weight for age and class. Winner of a race with Rs. 1,000 or more added money (including handicaps) once 5lbs., twice 7lbs., oftener 10lbs. extra. Winner of a race with Rs. 500 or more added money (including handicaps), once 3lbs., twice or oftener, 5lbs. extra. Maidens allowed 7lbs., of the meeting 10lbs. Horses landed after 1st September, 1889, allowed 4lbs. extra. Entrance, 1st June, 3 G. M.; entrance, 1st August, 8 G. M.; entrance, 1st September, 15 G. M., when the race will close with a sweepstake of 5 G. M. for each horse declared to start. R. C. and a distance. The second horse to receive Rs. 300, and the third to save his stake and entry.

WE hear that the Government of India has accepted the resignation by Dewan Bahadur Manibhai Jashbai (the Minister-elect of the Baroda State) of his appointment in the British Service as Native Assistant to the Governor-General at Baroda. Dewan Bahadur Manibhai will assume charge of his new office as soon as the formal sanction of Government is received.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

(May 7.)

Uncles and Aunts is probably to be the first play put on the stage by the Simla A.D.C.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOT returned to Simla from Bombay on Monday.

MR. O'CALLAGHAN, consulting engineer to Government of India for Railways, has arrived in Simla.

CAPTAIN BRAZIER CREAGH, A.D.C. to the Viceroy, left Simla on the 29th ult. for Europe on three months' leave.

THE Queen's Birthday will be observed in Simla on the 24th inst., and the Viceroy will hold the usual levee on the evening of that day. As in England the celebration of the anniversary has been fixed three days earlier.

It is not unlikely that a public meeting will be held in Simla for the purpose of considering whether the usual races cannot be held in time instead of September next. It is thought that the course, thanks to the recent rain, may now be brought into a fit condition in time.

DURING the past winter the Viceregal Lodge at Simla has undergone a thorough rehauling, and is now reported to be in an excellent state of repair. The electric light is a great success. In consequence of the scarcity of ice in the station it has been found necessary to start an ice machine.

THE following compose the party at present staying at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, in addition to their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne:—Lord Kerry, Lady Beatrice FitzMaurice and Lady Maud Anson; Colonel J. C. Ardagh, R.E., Private Secretary; Captain H. Streatfeild, Acting Military Secretary, and Lady Florence Streatfeild; Captains the Hon. C. Harbord and Lister (K.R. Rifles), Pakenham, and Brazier-Creagh.

BURMA.

SURGEON FROST, Veterinary Instructor in Burma, goes on leave immediately, and reverts to military employment on return.

MR. RAYMENT, of the Horse Breeding Department, will also go on six months' special leave.

THE steamer Cleveland, with 2,000 tons of rails and 1,000 tons of girders for the Mu Valley Railway, arrived at Rangoon on the 28th ultimo.

A TIGER in a rice mill! That is the novel experience enjoyed by Messrs. W. Strang, Steel and Company, proprietors of the Brighton Bay and Liverpool Mill, Rangoon, on the 25th ult. The mill was in possession of the tiger; but his right was disputed by the owners, and he was shot after some trouble by Mr. A. L. Hewett.

THE telegraph line which is being constructed from Chittagong to Burma is, we hear, making excellent progress, being now laid on the east side to Haka and on the west side to Fort Tregear. When the intervening space of some sixty miles only is completed, there will be uninterrupted connection between Chittagong and Mandalay.

DR. E. FORCHHAMMER, Professor of Pali in the Rangoon College and Government Archaeologist, died on Saturday, the 26th ult., on board the Mandalay, mail steamer, on his way to Rangoon. His death was very sudden, and the cause is believed to be heart disease, from which the deceased was known to be suffering. His funeral took place the following day at Myingyan.

FOREST officers are now said to be carrying out their explorations along the foot of the Chin Hills, in the neighbourhood of Laungshwe and Yaw without escorts. This shows very conclusively that the pacification of the country has been satisfactorily accomplished.

A DEPUTY COMMISSIONER in Burma lately made a large agricultural advance without stipulating for the payment of interest by the cultivators who borrowed. District Officers have, therefore, been informed that the local Government has to pay the Government of India four per cent. interest on all sums advanced by way of agricultural loans, and has also to make good all losses consequent on the non-payment of such loans. If the above precedent were followed the local Government would, therefore, sustain serious loss. The rate of interest to be charged in future on all agricultural loans will be 6½ per cent., and no reduction may be made without special sanction.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

The United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) has had the start of the majority of its contemporaries by making an earlier appearance this month. If contributions are to be valued by the "big" names of the contributors—which is in some measure a Nineteenth Century literary creed—the Editor of the military review is to be congratulated on the powerful phalanx which represents the National interests in the pages of The United Service Magazine for June. Was it not Dr. Johnson who said that when a lord condescended to become an author he had a special claim on the attention of the public? But what would the burly critic of Fleet have said had he found a magazine contained in one number articles from a Duchess, a Marquis, a Viscount, and a Lord? Her Grace of Rutland opens the literary work of the magazine with some approving remarks on the Royal Military Exhibition, but her opinions on the battle pictures there do not coincide with those of the Broad Arrow in its amusing article last week. The Marquis of Lorne contributes an excellent paper on the "Canadian Militia," in which he states his views with praiseworthy frankness. Lord Charles Beresford writes well and to the point on the subject of "National Insurance," and "The Case against the Channel Tunnel" is supported by a letter from Lord Wolseley, whose opinion is endorsed by many influential names. To military readers the most thoughtful paper will be, perhaps, the translation from the German called, "A Summer Night's Dream," and the most interesting one that on Waterloo, in which Colonel Maurice has taken upon himself the task of proving that the hero of the battle—the great Duke—did not write lies to Blücher about the distribution of the British troops; but, as lies were written, the blame must be put against an inefficient staff. Competitive examination and the Staff College prevent now the possibility of such things recurring. Rudyard Kipling is not seen in his best in "A Conference with the Powers"; we prefer him with "Soldiers Three" than with three Subalterns.

The magazine is evidently being vigorously pushed, and success should follow such energy.

THE Rangoon Times' correspondent wires that a party of police under the District Superintendent of Police, Sandoway, met a rebel gang under Shine Thine near Tang-up Woetuding, capturing the leader.

A LOCAL sportsman at Darjeeling accounted recently for a tiger which measured 10½ feet from tip of nose to end of tail. The tiger was encountered and killed on foot with an 8-inch-bore double-barrelled gun.

"RIFLE JUNIOR" writes to a Madras journal:—"The subject of the wanton destruction of game on the Nilgiris is a hardy annual which blooms regularly at this season of the year. That game is getting yearly more and more scarce on the accessible parts of the plateau there can be no doubt. And this is not to be wondered at, when, as is reported to have occurred this season, one man goes out and makes a bag consisting of one doe ibex and two spike horn stags, and wounds, to die in sholahs, six spike horn stags. The efforts of the Game Association towards the preservation of game are useless in view of such wanton slaughter, and, though such slaughter is not of frequent occurrence, the possibility of it clearly indicates an urgent necessity of some further and punitive powers being conferred on the Association, unless the Game Act is to become practically a dead letter."

INTRODUCTION OF EXOTICS.—Among the several establishments which are carrying on successful experiments under Government supervision in connection with the introduction of useful plants and fruit-bearing trees, the Botanical Government Gardens at Saharanpur stand prominently forward. A recent report shows that among other exotics that have received attention there is the American dewberry. "A fruit, too, which may find a future home in India (says the Englishman) is the Otaheiti apple, said to compare with the pine apple in flavour. Its extended cultivation is strongly recommended. With more or less successful results Florida loquats, Malacca apples, English vines, Italian olives, and Persian date palms have received careful trials. Interesting experiments have also been made in the gardens with huskless barley for malting purposes, and with foreign varieties of sugar-cane. Experiments with the potato, which has proved one of the best paying crops for the market gardener, have shown that in India as in other countries the plant is liable to disease, and that the root, when once acclimatised to the hills, succeeds but poorly, in the plains. Curiously enough, the least productive variety has been found to be absolutely disease proof."

INDIAN TRADERS AND THE CASH BALANCE

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce forwarded a copy of the Budget Statement to the Upper India Chamber at Calcutta, with a view to obtaining their opinions upon it and representing them to the Mercantile Members of the Imperial Legislative Council. The Secretary of the Calcutta Chamber in reply wrote as follows, under date April 10th:—

"My Committee do not consider that there are any points in it involving the interests of the community which they represent that call for special comments, except in as far as the financial transactions and policy of Government affect the supply and price of money in Upper India.

"Some two years ago Government changed its custom as regards the disposal of balances on hand and has since held locked up at various points in the mofussil, as reserves, the bulk of these funds. The district balances are not, as was previously the case, at the disposal of the banks for short date advances, and they consequently cannot now do business on the basis of the actual cash in their vaults. Further, it is understood that, even when Government has no actual immediate need for money, large sums are frequently withdrawn and placed in the Reserve Treasury. Thus a very considerable percentage of the bullion in the country has been rendered practically non-existent, as far as trade is concerned, and the available currency reduced by the amount of these hoards.

"The enclosed statement shows the highest point that the Bank of Bengal Calcutta minimum discount rate has reached in each month, November to April inclusive, for the past ten years. It will be seen that money has since 1888 been at a very much higher level than was the normal state of affairs formerly, even including the time of the Russian war scare and other periods of political tension and disturbance. If in future, during the produce season, rates in the mofussil are to continue to rule at from twelve to fifteen per cent. for first-class bills, the export and import trade of these Provinces will be to all intents and purposes paralysed. From November to April large sums are required to bring the cotton oilseed wheat and grain crops into the market, and if money is not available on reasonable terms the bazaar dealers and petty traders of small means, through whom the bulk of the business of the country is carried on, will be utterly unable to work; and this is practically the case to a notable extent at the present moment.

"When bankers and merchants of approved standing have to pay abnormally high rates for accommodation it means that the less well-to-do class cannot get funds for trade purposes except at an exorbitant cost. As high as 20 per cent. has been paid by dealers of fair commercial standing during the current year on short-term drafts. Be the reason what it may, in times of dear money Bombay and Calcutta appear always to be in the position to pay much higher rates of interest than up-country trade can stand, and therefore money is drained to these centres generally at the particular season of the year when it is most urgently needed in the mofussil for produce. At these times the banks show a not unnatural disposition to do as little business as they can at their branches so as to have the bulk of their funds available at the seaports above-named. It has been suggested that it might be feasible for Government to adopt some system that would allow of the Presidency Banks making advances against Government paper from the Reserve Treasury balances, and that this, while reducing the indebtedness of the State to the public, would leave at the disposal of the banks for short-term loans on account of raw produce and piece-goods a large percentage of their funds which are now swallowed up in advances made against Government paper to speculators, the exchange and other Banks.

"My Committee, however, do not advance this as a remedy; they are not disposed to join in the discussion regarding the political or financial advisability of Government carrying heavy reserves of bullion and not allowing its cash balances to be made available for trade purposes. They simply desire to direct attention to the disastrous effect of the present system on up-country business, that it is hurting both cultivators and dealers, and if not modified agriculture as well as the trade in the mofussil, and consequently that of the seaports, will be seriously crippled."

Attached to this reply is the following letter from Mr. A. Izat, Agent of the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company:—

"In corroboration of the statement made in your letter of the 10th inst. to the Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce, regarding the effect of dear money on the export trade of these Provinces, I would beg to inform you that in the districts served by this railway there has been an excellent crop of linseed during the past season, but owing to the dearth of money the merchants say they have not the means of financing the crop, and the trade is practically paralysed."

INDIAN TIME-EXPIRED SOLDIERS IN AUSTRALIA.

THE question of how best to provide for the time-expired men of the British army has been one of considerable difficulty since the introduction of the short service system. The late Sir Charles Trevelyan, who did so much to abolish the systems of purchase and pension, thought that there would be no difficulty in providing for all respectable retired soldiers in the junior departments of the Civil Service, such as the Post Office, Custom House, and other similar institutions. But the schoolmaster was not so much abroad then as now, when, to obtain even the lowest situation under Government, a competitive examination must be undergone. The difficulty, therefore, of providing for retired warriors at home has become greater than ever. Employers of labour, however patriotic may be their sentiments on paper or platforms are not altogether anxious to give employment to retired soldiers who are liable to be called away from work when the Reserves are called out, and so a great majority of such retired soldiers are living a very hand-to-mouth existence. Some are in very straitened—very desperate—circumstances. And some who have done the State good service have found in their latter days that the only shelter which the State can offer them is the workhouse. The British public is just now in one of its spasmodic fits of sentimentality, and the hat is being vigorously passed along for subscriptions in aid of the survivors of the Balaclava Charge. If the fit lasts long enough possibly the charitable idea may be made to take into consideration the condition of some of the survivors of the Crimean and Indian campaigns also. But our immediate object is not to call attention to what has been done or left undone for the retired soldier at home, but to what has been attempted on his behalf in India.

It may be remembered that Sir Edward Walter, who originated the Corps of Commissionaires in London, and who was made a K.C.B. for his philanthropic exertions on behalf of the old soldier, went to Australia, with the view of establishing a similar corps there, as a means of providing for steady old soldiers retired from service in India. He came back full of confidence in the ultimate success of such a scheme; and so the experiment was attempted, and a Corps of Commissionaires was formed at Sydney, New South Wales. In the spring of 1888 Major Hawkins, then head of that corps, wrote to the leading Anglo-Indian Press, asking it to be made known that he was in want of men, and that suitable candidates from India could easily make from thirty-five to forty-five shillings a-week. The Press willingly gave publicity to the Major's statement, and on the strength of it several time-expired soldiers of good character left India for the land of gold and plenty. Up to the end of June last inducements were still being out officially to retired Indian soldiers to join, and Sir Edward Walter was still confident of the ultimate success of the scheme.

But what are the facts to-day? The Overland Mail to hand brings a letter from the "Paying Officer of Imperial Pensions," dated Sydney, March 27th, 1890, in which he asks the Editors of the Anglo-Indian Press to warn soldiers taking their discharge in India with the view of joining the Corps of Commissionaires in Australia, against such a suicidal step." And he gives excellent reason for this recommendation. In the first place, "The New South Wales branch of the Corps of Commissionaires is disbanded. Major Hawkins, who was in command in Sydney, has, with his Sergeant-Major, returned to England, and the other members have been turned adrift to find employment for themselves." The writer of this letter, Mr. Geo. E. Labertouche, has held the position of Paying Officer of Imperial Pensioners in New South Wales since 1872, and it is evident from the tone of his remarks that he did not look with particular favour upon the efforts of those who first induced retired soldiers from India to seek their future fortune in Australia. "I am aware," he writes, "that Sir Edward Walter, the head of the English corps, visited India for the express purpose of inducing soldiers (by means of agents and widely distributed circulars) to come to New South Wales as soon as they obtained their discharge, for the purpose of joining the Corps of Commissionaires here. What was the consequence?"

Mr. Labertouche tells it pithily and painfully:—

"Any number of men took their discharge after short service instead of serving the time necessary to procure a pension. Men of excellent character, bringing with them first-class testimonials from their officers, arrived in Sydney, presented themselves to the Commissionaire's office, and were either refused at once or taken on, only to be discharged at the end of a month or two, probably penniless, as the system of fines for trivial offences leaves a man but little spare cash at the end of the month.

"These men naturally come to me for advice and help, and no one knows better than I do the misery, the almost starvation, these men have to endure while seeking employment. When their money is gone their landlords turn them and their families (if they have the misfortune to be married) out into the streets, to sleep at night in the public parks, or on the doorsteps in back streets. Sometimes these poor, disappointed, broken-down men, with hardly enough clothing on them to hide their nakedness (I am not exaggerating, as I have frequently supplied them with clothes of my own, or money to procure clothes and boots out of my own pocket) are lucky enough to be allowed to join the local 'Permanent Artillery'; but if a man is under 5 feet 7 inches, or fails to pass the very strict medical examination, he is blocked there. The police officials, as a rule, object to enrol soldiers; in fact out of the 500 and odd men on the books of this office there is not one in the Police.

"The ordinary employers of labour here have, as a rule, a deep-rooted objection to employ soldiers, and if the men in Her Majesty's service in India only knew how utterly false are the prospects held out to them (presumably by shipping agents, or the advocates of emigration to Australia) they would remain in their several regiments, or, if determined to take their discharge, would return to England. In that glorious land, our mother-country, a soldier is respected, and has a first claim to good employment; here it is quite the reverse, and believe me, Sir, I write what hundreds of soldiers could verify, that Australia is the worst country in the world for a soldier to come to."

We should like very much to know what Sir Edward Walter has to say on this subject now.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUTENANT P. HOLLAND has been appointed a paid Attaché in the Intelligence Branch, and consequently resigns his appointment of A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief.

THE movement lately started to better the position of Native officers in the Army is making good progress, and an improvement in their position is being worked out.

THE introduction of the new magazine rifle in India as a general measure will, it is believed, entirely depend on the capability of the powder-workers at Ishapore to turn out a suitable smokeless powder similar in every respect to that about to be introduced at home.

AN Indian Army Circular notifies that henceforward the designation of District Staff Officers, 1st and 2nd Class, will be changed to Assistant Adjutant-General and Deputy-Assistant-General, respectively.

IN future, officers desirous of entering the Indian Service will make their election while at Sandhurst, and receive their Indian commissions direct from the College, though they will still be attached to British regiments for a year after their arrival in this country. The new plan, not to disturb conflicting interests, will not be brought into force until 1892, but its adoption then has been virtually settled, the home authorities being in concurrence with those in India as to the disadvantages of the present system.

THIS year the amount of the usual indent to England for stallions for the Horse Breeding Department will be lessened by a thousand pounds, as the authorities have decided to spend this amount in India in the purchase of country stallions. The sum will, at any rate, suffice for the purchase of some twenty animals, as against only four or five if imported from home, so it is hoped that the results will be satisfactory.

THE Government of India have notified that all assistant apothecaries in charge of civil stations, whether in India or Burma, will receive pay at the rate of Rs. 250 per mensem, with retrospective effect from 17th August, 1889. Assistant apothecaries holding such charges in Burma will receive in addition a local allowance of Rs. 50 a month. Quinquennial increments will count from the date of promotion to the rank of apothecary and commencement to draw Rs. 350 a month. To entitle a medical warrant officer to the allowances laid down above he must be in independent medical charge of a civil station.

THE Times of India, in a notice of the career of Colonel W. Luckhardt, Commissary-General in Bombay, who is taking three months' leave, hints that he may be shortly succeeding to the post of Commissary-General-in-Chief. "But why?" asks the Pioneer. "If General Badcock is going, the knowledge of his intention has not leaked out on this side of India."

IN Section 4 of the Army Regulations in India, Volume IX, it is laid down that "Volunteer corps will consist of Europeans or those of European descent." The Indian Mirror asks:—"How are we to reconcile this with the recent assurance of Sir John Gorst in the House of Commons that all Natives of India are eligible for admission to the Volunteer corps?"

AN important change has been made by the Accountant-General, Military Department. For a number of years back the pay of the soldier in India, his good-conduct pay, extra duty pay, gratuities, prizes for skill at arms, &c., have by order of the Secretary of State for India been paid at the rate of exchange fixed annually for the payment of British troops serving in the Colonies. It is stated that these rates "are converted into Indian money, at the rate of exchange fixed annually for the adjustment of financial transactions between the Imperial and Indian Governments." It so happens that no change will be made this year on this announcement, the rate of exchange for the Colonies and that for financial transactions being identical, but many changes in existing regulations will be caused thereby.

THE following modifications have been made in the Regulations for the study of the Russian language by officers of the Indian Army:—(1) The maximum number of permissions granted for officers of the Indian Army to proceed to Russia for a course of study shall be 15 in an official year. (2) Officers proceeding to Russia will for the future be required to reside in such Russian towns as may be indicated to them by the Director of Military Intelligence, to whom they should report themselves for instructions. (3) Only those officers will be recommended for permissions to avail themselves of the Regulations for the study of Russian, who, from their character as soldiers and the nature of their service, appear likely to be utilised as Russian interpreters, or as staff and regimental officers on the frontier or in the field. (4) No officer on leave on medical certificate will be allowed to proceed to Russia on duty unless reported fit by the Medical Board at the India Office.

BRITISH non-commissioned officers and privates who have a taste for surveying and reconnaissance can add five rupees per mensem to their pay by undergoing a course of instruction in those subjects at Thomason College, Rurki, and passing the required test, provided they maintain their proficiency and obtain a certificate annually to that effect from the District Staff Officer of the command in which they are serving.

THE Madras Government has sanctioned the proposal of Colonel LaTouche, Superintendent of Army Clothing, to visit the manufacturing centres in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies for the purpose of introducing more extensively Indian manufactures for military clothing and conferring personally with mill managers and others for improving the qualities of the present supplies. The purchases for the department now amount to about Rs. 1,50,000 annually.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SANFORD, Inspector-General of Military Works, arrived in Simla last Saturday week after a prolonged tour of inspection to Bombay and Madras, consequent on the extension of the Military Works Department to those Presidencies. General Sanford has also, during his tour, which commenced in November last, recently visited and inspected the Defence Works at Aden as well as those at Bombay, Karachi, and Sukkur.

OF the four soldiers implicated in the Dum Dum homicide, O'Hara and Bellew, the Lahore military paper learns, have left the country for England, and Gouldsbrough and Macdermott have gone to Australia. Each of the men received Rs. 500 to pay for his passage and expenses.

IT appears that it is not only the adjutants of British regiments, whose corps have removed to England, that the Accounts Department have attempted to cut off the British pay of their rank. Several officers belonging to British regiments now serving in the country, who were attached to the Chin-Lushai Expedition, for transport and other duties, have been informed that they are only to receive the Staff Corps pay of their rank in place of the British pay of their rank.

THE Lahore military paper writes:—"We believe that while it is wholly improbable that the military authorities in India will be so injudicious as to peremptorily forbid the playing of polo by military men, it is not unlikely that they will address commanding officers on the subject in such terms as may have the effect of largely diminishing the long catalogue of disasters which has to be published almost every year. We have more than once pointed out the chance there is that the money which ought to be spent on suitable chargers may be spent in the purchase of polo ponies; and we learn that more than one inspecting officer during recent tours has had reason to think that this is what has happened. While, however, the military authorities recognise the inadvisability of issuing orders prohibiting the game, they could easily, and we hope will, call the attention of polo-playing officers to the precautions by the adoption of which they can reduce the hazard of the sport to a minimum. The height of the ponies should be materially diminished, and the polo-player should protect his head and neck by a proper form of head-covering. Polo-playing, it might be recollected, is always played in the country of its origin on the most diminutive of animals, and although the Manipuris do not mount sola topis, they do not want them, because their heads are as hard as brickbats. We will not go the length of suggesting that the game in India might be very pleasantly played on donkeys, as was done not many years ago at Bandon in Ireland."

A SCHEME for the extension of the Simla waterworks is under the consideration of Government. Mr. A. Young-husband, executive engineer, is in charge of the scheme. The cost of the extension is estimated at about five lakhs. So far as can be predicted at present, there is no probability of serious scarcity of water.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MAY 16.

—:o:—

HALL-MARKING OF INDIAN WARES.

In answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH,
Sir J. GORST said: The Secretary of State has referred the proposals of the Government to institute a special system of hall-marking for Indian wares to the Viceroy, but there has not yet been time for a reply.

INDIAN TEMPLE PROPERTY.

In answer to Mr. BRADLAUGH,
Sir J. GORST said: An official inquiry was ordered with respect to the seizure and confiscation of certain property and trust funds belonging to the temples of Gunnessh, Shiva, and Anpura, and the Chattras at Benares; and two reports, dated Feb. 14 and April 14, 1889, were made. These reports were unfavourable to the claim of the trustees of the temples, nor did the Commissioner suggest, as alleged, that property should be restored. No restoration has taken place, because the Government of India, after full consideration of the case, has come to the conclusion that the claim now preferred is not only unsupported by any evidence, but is also improbable and inconsistent with the claimants' own conduct.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: Will the reports be laid on the table?

Sir J. GORST: There is no objection to lay the reports on the table if the hon. member moves for them.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: I will move for them.

MAY 19.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF INDIA.

Sir R. TEMPLE presented a petition from the Mahomedans of the Punjab and Delhi, signed by upwards of 21,000 persons in their own vernacular. The prayer of the petition was adverse to the elective principle as proposed by what was called the National Congress of India.

MAY 20.

OVERCROWDING OF THE TROOPSHIP MALABAR.

In answer to Dr. FARQUHARSON,

Mr. E. STANHOPE said: The embarkation of troops in India is entirely regulated by the Government of India. Therefore, when my attention was drawn to the apparent overcrowding of the Malabar I requested the Secretary of State for India to give the matter his consideration. As a result an investigation is now taking place.

MAY 23.

INDIAN AND AUSTRALIAN MAILS.

In answer to Colonel EYRE, for Colonel Hill,

Mr. RAIKES said: As every letter for India or Australia carried for a postage of 2d. would involve a loss, to double the amount of correspondence sent would but be to increase the loss, and, if the same increase took place in conjunction with a penny postage, the loss would of course be very largely augmented. With reference to the answer which I gave in this House on May 15 as to the estimated additional loss which the revenue would sustain by the establishment of a universal penny postage, I may say that the sum of £400,000 then mentioned would be largely increased by any considerable addition to the correspondence.

THE INDIAN SALT-TAX.

In answer to Mr. HOWELL,

Sir J. GORST said: The Secretary of State for India cannot admit that the increase of the salt-tax in 1888 was caused mainly, if not entirely, by the loss in exchange. That was one, but not the only one, of the causes which made the increase necessary. The Secretary of State and the Government of India are both anxious to reduce the salt-tax to its former amount so soon as it is possible to do so, but any statement at present would be premature.

It is satisfactory to learn that good progress is being made with the construction of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway. The work on the tunnel section is heavy, and rapid progress cannot be expected. So far, however, no exceptional difficulties have been encountered, and if all goes well it is expected that the railway will be ready for traffic by this time next year or even sooner. This is allowing for delays which may occur, and it is possible that the opening may take place as early as January next. The discovery of coal on the line is important, and ought to show that there is no present necessity for proceeding with the work on the branch to Umaria.

GANGPOOR.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In pages 597 and 598 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail for the 7th of this month the Editor records the impotent conclusions of the Bengal Government regarding the rebellion in Cheta Nagpoor. The Government trusts—

- 1st. To the gradual operation of time.
- 2nd. To the progress of education.
- 3rd. To the new railway.

The Government has recorded that the landlords openly admit that they have been exacting from sixty to eighty-four days field work a year from their tenants instead of fourteen days to which they are entitled.

If landlords in Ireland or England were illegally to quadruple rents on land what would be said and done?

Englishmen ought to know that field service without payment is slavery: we have been trying to abolish it in the land of slaves, Egypt.

1st. Government relies on the gradual operation of time. Time will inevitably cause rebellion; procrastination has caused the present trouble in Chota Nagpoor.

2nd. Education—Secular education will never drown the discontent caused by overwhelming and illegal rackrenting.

3rd. The new railway—Why? It is the increased value of the land caused by the new railway which has excited the landlords to rackrent.

On this new railway from Bombay to Calcutta our hold on India in future may depend. West of Gangpoor lie enormous fields of coal at Raigurh, at Hingir, and on the Eeb river: a fine field of coal has just been struck by chance on the banks of the Eeb river.

If all the agricultural population of Gangpoor are to be made our enemies because we go to sleep, and because we vainly trust in secular education, what will become of the railway in a time of war? Lord Ellenborough turned out all of the Civil Officers in the Saugur and Nerbaddeh Territories because they had not prevented disturbances when the British forces were moved to support Pollock and Nott.

Are we to lose India because we refuse to administer justice, or to put on their trial men who confess that they have been extorting four or five times as much as they are legally authorised to demand?

The exactions of the landlords have been perpetrated in the face of the orders of Government, and contrary to the decisions of the Law Courts.

If we are to retain India we must practise justice and firmness. The sight of four or five extortionate landlords working in our jail would soon pacify the Kols.—Your obedient servant,

May 26.

OBITUARY.

MAJOR-GENERAL FRANCIS CHARLES WELLS, retired, Bombay Army, died on the 13th inst., at The Oaks, near Southampton.

LIEUT.-COLONEL JAMES RAYMOND JOHNSTONE DEWAR, late Royal (Bengal) Artillery, who died on the 16th inst. at Comarques Hall, Thorpe-le-Soken, Essex, entered the Army in June, 1858, obtained his lieutenancy in August, 1858, captaincy in August, 1872, majority in April, 1879, and lieutenant-colonelcy in August, 1885. He served in the Afghan War of 1879-80, and took part in the March to Candahar with the force under Major-General Phayre (medal).

LIEUT.-COLONEL NATHANIEL JOHN COMINS STEVENS, of Oakford, Polsloe road, Exeter, late of the 102nd Royal Madras Fusiliers, died on the 15th inst. at Alexandra-terrace, Exmouth, in his fiftieth year. He joined the Army in July, 1857, became lieutenant in November, 1857, Captain in November, 1870, major in May, 1879, and lieutenant-colonel in May, 1880. He served in the suppression of the Mutiny in Bengal in 1857-58, including the occupation of the Alumbagh under Outram, capture of Lucknow, passage of the Goomtee at Sultanpore, and several minor affairs in Oude, receiving the medal with clasp.

MAJOR LIONEL LANGLEY, R.F., Executive Engineer, D.P.W., in the Kistna Eastern Division, eldest son of General Sir G. C. Langley, K.C.B., of St. Helen's, Southsea, died on the 18th ult. at Kulloor, near Secunderabad, from wounds caused by a tiger, at the age of thirty-nine years. The deceased obtained his lieutenantancy in July, 1870, captaincy in July, 1882, and majority in March, 1889.

DR. JOHN SCOTT, late Principal Inspector-General of Hospitals, Bombay Medical Service, died on the 17th inst. at his residence in Inverness-terrace, Hyde Park, W., in his eighty-sixth year.

THE UNCOVENANTED COMMITTEE.

The following letters have been addressed to the Editor of the Pioneer :—

Sir,—I am sure that many Uncovenanted officers besides myself will disapprove of the manner in which witnesses have been chosen to give evidence before the Committee. The individual officers are all that we could wish to be, but I think our witnesses ought to have been representatives of the different branches of the Uncovenanted Service, and I am sure many will agree with me in thinking so. If this principle had been followed our witnesses could have spoken with much more weight than those who have been chosen will be able to do. I give below twelve different branches of the service, from each of which a representative might have been chosen :—

1. Educational.
2. Financial.
3. Forests.
4. Opium.
5. Police.
6. Provincial Commissions.
7. Public Works—Cooper's Hill Engineers.
8. Public Works—Indian Engineers.
9. Public Works—Accounts.
10. Salt.
11. State Railways.
12. Telegraphs.

Witnesses so selected could have gone before the Committee as representing certain bodies of officers, and under such circumstances their evidence would have been of more weight in the opinion of Members of the House of Commons, themselves elected representatives.—UNCOVENANTED.

Sir,—While you notice that the Forest Department is totally unrepresented among the witnesses who have been chosen to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, regarding the grievances of the Uncovenanted Service, it would be as well to mention another—the Revenue Department—which has also been overlooked. There are men in this Department who have suffered—and are still suffering—by exchange considerably. The claims of the men locally recruited, in other than the selected departments, will not, it is hoped, be lost sight of; for we are all servants of the State, and suffer alike in the matter of exchange when we avail ourselves of furlough, or have large families being educated at home. Any consideration and help that may be extended to one branch of the service should be a privilege open to all, who suffer alike, whether the departments are small or large, locally recruited or otherwise.—A SUFFERER.

THE LAW COURTS IN RANGOON.

The Rangoon Gazette is by no means satisfied with the existing state of things :—

We publish to-day a telegram from our Calcutta correspondent, informing us that the Englishman has been criticising the arrangements in connection with the Recorder's Court in Rangoon. It is gratifying to find that our Indian contemporaries are gradually beginning to interest themselves in this province. Hitherto they have been far too prone to assume that anything was good enough for Burma, but the present article in the Englishman is only one out of many indications that public opinion in India is slowly awakening to the importance of this province. Without going quite so far as to say that the Recorder's Court has always been a mismanaged institution, it must be admitted that there is room for improvement in many ways. When the Recorder's Court was first started it was amply sufficient for the requirements of the place; but Rangoon is something like a rapidly-growing boy, who seems to be always thrusting his arms too far through the sleeves of his jackets; and the institutions which were amply sufficient for Rangoon twenty years ago are utterly inadequate now. This has been pointed out over and over again by the Chamber of Commerce, and various patch-work arrangements have been made to meet the more urgent necessities as they arose, but we are still denied the High Court which was asked for years ago. This is the more galling, as Rangoon is now the capital of a very large and important province, and the third city of the Indian Empire, judged by its volume of trade. Moreover, far less important places have long had properly constituted High Courts, instead of the farce of two Judges hearing jointly appeal cases which one or other of them had previously decided individually. It is manifest that the referring Judge will not, as a rule, allow his own decisions to be reversed. It would be too much to expect of human nature that a man should write himself down an ass in this way. If there is to be an Appellate Court at all, its members should be perfectly free from the bias which a previous decision must entail.

The Englishman points out that there is no Chinese interpreter attached to the Recorder's Court. This is a blot, no doubt; but perhaps not so great a one as it seems at first sight. It is true that there is a large Chinese population in Rangoon, but the majority of them speak Burmese fluently, and in perhaps nine cases out of ten a Chinese witness can give his evidence in Burmese or in English as well as he could do in Chinese. When it is necessary to examine a Chinaman who can only speak his own tongue, there can be no very great difficulty in getting an interpreter for the occasion, probably a very much better one than any we should get were a man specially retained on a small salary for this work. Hindustani, Tamil, and Burmese interpreters must be kept on the premises, as they are constantly wanted; but a Chinese interpreter would have nothing to do most of the time. A far more serious blot is that the interpreters in the courts of Rangoon are for the most part imperfectly educated men, who make a dreadful hash of their work. This is not the case so much in the Recorder's Court, perhaps; but elsewhere, and sometimes even there, one hears long conversations between the interpreter and the witness, and the judge or one of the barristers has constantly to protest against the way in which the interpreter puts the question to the witness, or renders his answers. It is always difficult to examine an illiterate witness, unaccustomed to use words in an exact sense, but the difficulty is increased tenfold when this has to be done through an interpreter almost as illiterate as the witness. The remedy, of course, lies in having a better educated class of men as interpreters, which, of course, means some additional expenditure, as men trained to any accuracy of thought and of speech are not to be obtained in Burma on the pittance given to interpreters.

The question of the Official Assignee, to which the Englishman refers, is a serious one. Every one admits that the present state of things should be altered. Without any reflection on Mr. Villa, who has endeavoured to do the work faithfully and honestly, it may be said that he has neither the time nor the necessary qualifications for the work. He is not a lawyer, and therefore has to take advice on every legal point; and he has not the leisure, even if he were a thoroughly trained accountant, to disentangle the accounts submitted to him. The Chamber of Commerce, we believe, asked to have a barrister appointed on a fixed salary to do this work, but were told that the law would not admit of the Official Assignee being paid by a salary. This is a foolish reason to give, for if the work can be better done in this way the law can and should be altered. Certainly both in the case of the Official Assignee and of the Government Advocate it is desirable that their official work should be their sole work. Our contemporary is, however, completely in error with regard to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General in England and in Ireland. Those gentlemen still enjoy the right of private practice, as do the law officers in Crown Colonies, though doubtless the current of public opinion is such that a change will soon be made. If a man has a certain fixed salary for certain work, and liberty to increase his income by private practice, it is inevitable that the latter should at times clash and interfere with his regular work. A conscientious man will do his best to avoid this, but he is serving two masters, and however he may strive to serve both faithfully, the service cannot be quite the same thing as if he were paid to devote the whole of his time and thought to one of them. The work of Government Advocate is ample to occupy one man's whole time; and so is that of Official Assignee if it is properly done. The two require somewhat different qualifications, and should, we think, be kept quite separate and distinct. The bulk of the work in each case is well within the reach of any fairly intelligent man, and there should be no difficulty in getting a competent man to take up the work on some such salary as Rs. 1,000, rising to Rs. 1,500 per mensem. The highest legal attainments are not necessary, as, when advice is wanted on any specially knotty and intricate point of law, it can be submitted to some eminent legal luminary. But, whatever arrangements are made, Government should pay the men it employs for the whole of their time, and not leave them to eke out an inadequate income by private practice.

We understand that in consequence of Government not being able to spare the services of Colonel Westmacott, the Baroda Durbar have applied to the Government of India for the loan of the services of Captain R. G. Jones, of the Madras Army, as Military Adviser to his Highness the Gaekwar.

NEWS FROM UPPER BURMA.

A correspondent from Bhamo, under date the 18th April last, writes as follows :—The 17th Regiment of Bengal Infantry left this on the 16th, and the 11th Madras N.I. took its place. The officers' quarters consist of wooden-built houses, one block accommodating two, three, or four officers. Each officer gets a fair-sized room for his office, and drawing and bed-room all rolled into one; a small dressing-room and a bath-room. The houses are almost all upper-storeyed, the officers occupying the rooms upstairs, the ground floor being used by servants and for storing the heavy baggages belonging to their masters. For one unit an officer pays a monthly rent of Rs. 25, which is considered very exorbitant when compared with a house in Indian cantonments with ten times its accommodation, with large compounds and outhouses. These quarters are not furnished. The few articles that an officer has would probably cost him Rs. 80. Bhamo is a town of some five to six thousand inhabitants of all creeds; some are Burmans, a lot of Shans, Chinese, and a mixture of Indians and Burmaps and Shans. There is also a fair proportion of Natives of India here. I never thought Bhamo was such a half-civilised country. There has been an American Mission establishment for years past. Among the military population there are two ladies with two of the officers of a Bombay Mountain Battery, while there were three more before the 11th Regiment came here. A European Rangoon merchant has a large branch here, where you can buy anything in provisions, stores, fancy goods, wines, and spirits, &c. This shop is as good as any European shop in a large town in India. He has also a billiard table in the Bhamo Club, where there is a reading-room, whist tables, a refreshment bar, and a dining-room. We have also a tennis-court and polo-ground. But who would have thought that there was a steam saw-mill in Bhamo? Still there is one here, opened some two or three years ago. This is an expensive place to live in. All sorts of provisions are dear; fresh milk only two bottles and a-half for a rupee; no mutton, but when obtainable, it costs thirteen annas a pound; beef four annas; no vegetables; an ordinary-sized fowl fourteen annas, and a large one a rupee to a rupee and a-quarter. Carpenters earn here from Rs. 2½ to Rs. 3 a day. The military post is built on a piece of high ground, about a quarter of a mile from the river Irrawady on its left or east bank. The barracks for troops are all built of wood, having walls, floors, roofs of wood, and even the tiles are made of wood, everything being strong and substantial. The close vicinity of the fort was once a dense forest of timber trees; but they have all been cleared for nearly a mile-and-a-half in all directions, both for the sake of health and on military grounds. The weather is at present comparatively healthy, but hot. Occasional showers of rain cool the air and lay the dust. We had a strong shower this morning for nearly three hours, rendering a ride out or a walk very pleasant. The surrounding scenery is very charming, but not half so picturesque as some on the river through which we steamed up coming to Bhamo. We get letters from India only once a week; but the mails go out from here twice a week. A fortnight is an average time for a letter to travel from Bombay to Bhamo, and vice versa.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The bird's-eye views of the chief thoroughfares are a new feature of streetography, and far more useful than maps. Altogether, it is a most valuable handbook to the metropolis."—GRAPHIC.

"Very extensive in its information and interesting in its details—as a text-book for explanation and as a historical book of reference—it will be found most useful and entertaining."—DAILY NEWS.

"An admirable guide, full of information. The bird's-eye views are very interesting. They often give even those who are familiar with London a new idea of the relation of localities."—ILLUSTRATED SPORTING AND DRAMATIC NEWS.

"In addition to an admirably arranged and vividly written description of all the places and sites of interest in London, interspersed with numerous historical notes and details, the guide contains a feature which is absolutely unique in a series of eighteen bird's-eye views of the principal thoroughfares and the buildings of importance which abut upon them. It is unquestionably one of the most serviceable of the works issued for the behoof of visitors to the metropolis."—SCOTSMAN.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . .
there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—
Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the recorstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1838

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When, out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—

J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 16th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 14th May; and from Calcutta to the 14th May.

SEVERAL cases of small-pox have occurred in Simla. A large boarding-house and jeweller's firm have closed their doors in consequence of the outbreak on their premises.

THE Government of India will, no doubt, accept the reduction in the overland postage rate, but the rate will probably be reduced to two and a half or two and a quarter annas.

THE Government of India has entered into an agreement with the Cashmere State to construct a telegraph line from Suchetgurb to Jammu.

A MOVEMENT is on foot for a memorial to the late Colonel Wise. Few officers have passed away from amongst us in recent years whose memory is more worthy of suitable recognition.

CAPTAIN PINK, of the Siam Boundary Commission, is shortly expected to reach Calcutta from Rangoon.

THE usual Sipri fair will not be held at Simla this year, in consequence of the serious illness of the Rana of Koti.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL DE FABECK has been gazetted Surgeon-General with the Government of Madras.

COLONEL E. S. REYNOLDS' transfer to the Kotah Political Agency has been abandoned for the present; Colonel Abbott will take charge of the Agency in addition to his Jhallawar duties.

MAJOR BUCHANAN SCOTT, C.I.E., of Chapar Rift celebrity, who left India some two years ago to take the management of a large land company in California, is returning to the Public Works Department in August.

FURTHER charges of forgery and fraud have been brought against the Jewish speculator, Elias Solomon, who was arrested in Calcutta last week. The Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, it appears, made an advance to him on April 23rd of 3½ lakhs of rupees on the security of 350 chests of opium, and the documents purporting to be opium passes are declared to be forgeries. Solomon's operations have been on a large scale, though the alleged frauds were carried out in a very short space of time.

THE returns of the trade and navigation of British India for the twelve months ending March 31st last show an increase in the value of the exports to foreign countries amounting to about six and a-half crores of rupees. More than half of this is due to an increased export of raw cotton, and the remainder chiefly to improved jute prices and increased exports of rape and jinjili seed. The total of imports remained practically stationary, a large increase under the head of metals being balanced by an equally large decrease under yarns and textile fabrics.

THE latest strike is among the salt merchants of Calcutta, who have declined since the 18th inst. to make any purchases from the Sulkea Depot.

THEY object to the new arrangement, under which the coolie labour required for the conveyance of salt from the Golahs is provided by the Government contractors, asserting that the cost of the transport is thereby doubled.

THE report of the Committee which met last March, under the presidency of the Legislative Secretary, to consider the working of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, has just been published.

THE drafts of instructions for the guidance of Customs officers are described as framed to simplify their work and action, and it is believed that, while not substantially affecting the operation of the Act, they will tend to prevent an unnecessary interference with honest trade.

PIECE GOODS and yarns are not to be examined except under orders of the Collector personally, while such examination is only to be made to ascertain that goods are stamped as required by law.

THE accuracy of stamping is only to be tested when the Collector has reason to suspect that fraud is being practised, or when information to that effect has been received.

SUCH fabrics as laces, velvets, silks, and gauzes, which are liable to be injured by stamping, will be removed from the category of piece goods.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY, taking into consideration the lack of interest in municipal administration displayed by the inhabitants of eighteen towns in the Presidency, has dissolved the existing municipalities, superseding them by corporations composed of Government nominees.

It is reported from Mone that the local Siamese officers have already removed the boundary mark set up by Mr. Ney Elias, and are encroaching on what has been declared to be British territory.

HIS HIGHNESS THE THAKORE OF MORVI, it is said, intends to construct a new line of railway in Kattywar.

M. LE JEMBLE, Procureur-General, French Indian Colonies, died at Pondicherry on the evening of May 7th.

THE suit brought by Mr. Derry against the Secretary of State for over eight lakhs has been dismissed with costs. An appeal is likely to be made.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are being invited at Madras on account and on behalf of the survivors who took part in the charge of the Light Brigade.

ACCORDING to news received in Lahore on Tuesday, from Turkestan, the Ameer is still at Balkh, and will pass the summer at Darrai Shadian.

THE climate of Chunar, not having agreed with them, it is contemplated to remove the three half-brothers of Mahomed Ishak Khan, namely, Sirdar Mahomed Aziz Khan, otherwise known as the Sipah Salar; Sirdar Mahomed Mohsin Khan, and Sirdar Mahomed Hashim Khan, to Allahabad. Their return to Afghanistan to their wives and families, at no distant date, is said to be likely.

DEFINITE arrangements for an extension of the Kalka-Umballa Railway to Simla may be shortly expected.

COLONEL H. J. THORNTON, R.A., has assumed command of the Bombay District in place of Brigadier-General Bugden, who has gone away on leave.

THE captain of the Brenda has been warned, by the Marine Court of Inquiry held at Demerara, to be more careful in future when approaching these coasts.

MAJOR BUCHANAN SCOTT, C.I.E., of Chagar Rift celebrity, is returning to the Public Works Department in August.

THE news from the Dacca keddahs is extremely satisfactory. Mr. Savi has captured no fewer than 247 elephants in his last expedition.

A FIND of coal is reported by the agent of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway on the River Eeb.

MR. J. MACPHERSON, barrister-at-law, has been appointed to officiate as Advocate-General, Bombay, during Mr. Latham's absence in England.

A LARGE spinning and weaving mill, the property of Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit at Tardeo, was destroyed by fire on May 15th. The damage is estimated at Rs. 13,00,000.

FIVE lakhs of rupees under escort left Peshawur for Jamrud, on May 2nd, for the Ameer's subsidy.

THE Cashmere Council is now on the move from Jammu to Srinagar, and will meet again about the middle of this month.

JUDGMENT in the case of the five men charged with belabouring European boys lately near Poona has been given by the Haveli Mamlutdar. One was acquitted, and four were fined Rs. 5 each.

KRISHNARAO PURUNDHARE, late Nazar of the Small Causes Court, Poona, has been committed to the Sessions for criminal breach of trust as a public servant.

THE Bank of Bombay on the 8th inst. reduced its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to 6 per cent.

COLONEL CALDECOTT, R.A., Superintendent of the Gunpowder Factory at Kirkee, has, with his chief powder-maker, been deputed to England for a period of six months, to study the improvements made in the manufacture of the various powders required for use in this country.

LIEUT.-COLONEL GRACY, Superintending Engineer, Villapuram-Guntakul State Railway, is to officiate as Consulting Engineer for Railways in Madras until the return of Major Croaker from leave.

EXCEPT for a supply that exists 600 feet below the level of the present pipes at Simla there is not much prospect of increasing the present supply from new sources.

JUDGMENT in the case in which Mr. Derry, a contractor, sued the Secretary of State for eight lakhs of rupees for breach of contract in connection with the construction of the Bellary-Kistna Railway has been given by Mr. Justice Shepherd at Madras. All the important issues were decided against the plaintiff, the Judge holding that there was no contract in point of law, and that only remuneration could be claimed for work actually done.

SAWOO, the remaining son of the once celebrated Boh Shwo, the dacoit leader, has surrendered with eight followers at Minhla.

THE Burma Government have received information from Lieut. Daly, Superintendent of the Northern Shan States, that the Thebaw Tsawbwa has withdrawn his previous resignation, and will continue to administer his State as long as his two sons are in England.

THE Commissioner of the Central Division, Burma, reports the important capture of a leading rebel in the Sagain district, leaving only one leader at large out of the forty-nine who formerly infested this part of the country.

THE death in Upper Burma from fever has taken place of Captain Dunlop, Katha Battalion of Military Police.

HIS HIGHNESS THE THAKORE OF MORVI, it is said, intends to construct a new line of railway in Kattywar. Negotiations are going on with the Chief of Nawanugger to connect Rajkote with Nugger by rail. It is also the intention of the Thakore Sahab to open another line between Wudhwan and Drangdra.

NOTES.

NEITHER by telegram nor by Overland Mail is there anything important in the news from India to-day. The expected agitation against the income-tax has set in, but its abolition, desirable as it may be, is not likely to be brought about by memorials and meetings, however many. It must be, first of all, made clear to the Government how to find a substitute for a certainly unpopular tax. And that is the difficulty.

THE reply of the Government to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce concerning the assessment of income-tax, writes a contemporary, on the profits of consignments, has been received with general dissatisfaction by merchants and importers. There is an evident, and seemingly unanimous, intention on their part to refuse to furnish the particulars asked for by the Collector of Income-tax; and should this passive resistance be ineffectual, no doubt an active agitation will be organised both in India and at home.

IN connection with the alleged forgery of opium certificates in Calcutta it is not likely that much sympathy will be felt for the banks which have suffered very heavy losses, apparently through their own carelessness, writes the Pioneer. The Board of Revenue furnish to all the banks regular returns from the opium godowns, and an examination of these would at once have shown that the undelivered chests at no time equalled more than a small portion of those pledged by Mr. Solomon. These returns are specially circulated with a view to preventing fraudulent representations being made to local bankers by speculators in opium.

THE news that Simla is threatened with an attack of small-pox and a scarcity of water might be considered serious were it not that at the commencement of every Simla season for years past similar rumour has been circulated. It does not stop the exodus from the plains, which had fairly begun when the present mail left India.

BUT the Simla "season" does not properly commence, so the Punjab papers state, until the Birthday Ball has taken place. This is now over, and the small-pox scare will have been forgotten. If water be scarce is there not champagne to be had? The astonishment of the French Princess that the people of Paris should have clamoured for bread when cakes could be bought has its counterpart, we dare say, in the surprise of many of the summer sojourners at Simla that there should be any fuss made about a scarcity of water—at least, for drinking purposes.

ENGINEERS engaged on the East Coast Indian Railway survey seem to have a pleasant time of it, judging from a letter sent to a contemporary from Waltair. The correspondent describes the attractions of this favoured spot as superior to those of Darjeeling, especially for those suffering from liver diseases peculiar to Bengal. With excusable rapture he writes:—"We get all the dainties of the sea, fresh and cheap—oysters, crabs, prawns, pomfrets, &c., and last but not least a real, fresh, cool seabreeze day and night. Houses right on the sea need neither punkahs nor mosquito nets." If the picture is not to a large extent imaginary there ought to be a site on the East Coast for another temporary home for the itinerant Government of India. A maritime capital might be utilised on the way from Calcutta to Simla, and perhaps some day the Government might shrink from the journey into space, and settle down quietly in its cottage by the sea.

SHOULD the Supreme Government decide on making English weights and measures the legal standards for the whole of India, the Englishman thinks there can be little doubt that the change will be welcomed by both the European and Native community. Already the bulk of the seaborne trade is estimated according to the English system, and the mercantile community of Bombay have requested that this system should be recognised. With the Native community the change might at first be a source of confusion, but they would soon find that it was exactly adapted to their own system. To people unacquainted with India this may seem a matter for surprise, but it is nevertheless a fact in the case of measures both of weight and of capacity.

THE AMEER OF CABUL'S continued presence in Turkistan, writes the Civil and Military Gazette, indicates his sincere anxiety to preserve the peace and integrity of the Russo-Afghan border, and counteract the disturbing intrigues of his nephew Ishak and others, who are politically interned in Bokharan territory. With the Ameer of Bokhara he remains personally on friendly terms in consequence of his marriage connections, and, through his good offices and intervention, maintains a conciliatory disposition towards the Russian commanders in Russian Turkistan. The Ameer is quite astute enough to duly appreciate his dangerous position as a buffer between two great military powers, liable to be suddenly crushed by either. Our railway frontier surveys and projects, the occupation of the Zhob Valley, and the securing of both ends of the Gomal Pass are evidently causing him anxiety, as he believes that they menace the future independence of Afghanistan. He is said to regard the occupation of Kandahar as a foregone conclusion, entirely dependent upon the will of the British Government.

THIS is how Reis and Rayyat of Saturday last notices the late political meetings in the Emerald and Beadon Theatres in Calcutta:—"Admission being free and unrestricted, the theatres in Beadon-street, Black Town, were crowded to suffocation on Saturday evening. The farce announced might be named Cross Purposes, or How to Take the Name of the Nation in Vain, the object of the managers being the condemnation of Lord Cross's Reform Bill passed by the House of Lords. Babu Norendronath Sen, of the Indian Mirror, the Prince of Low Comedy Unconscious, was the leader fit of the actors. But it passes us how on earth was the Rishi's quiet son, who always resented the imputation of being a politician, to say nothing of an agitator—how was Dwijendernath the Good found among the Philistines! The cry of the bisected meeting was—No taxation without representation. The assembled hosts, however, without declaring a War of Independence, contented themselves with recording the stereotyped resolutions adopted throughout the country condemning Lord Cross's sober measure and praising up Mr. Bradlaugh's fanciful reform. If the papers of the party are to be believed, the country was never exercised so much as over the Cross Bill. Telegrams to the same effect are being transmitted from all sides, from all possible and impossible places. But those who know know that the agitation is only the pulling of the wires—telegraphic—nothing more."

A BLUE-BOOK has just been issued, in which will be found—unlike Blue-books in general—much to interest not only military men in India and at home, but civilians also who take intelligent thought of British administration in India. It contains a "copy of, or extracts from, correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State in Council in 1888-90 respecting proposed changes in the Indian Army system."

Amongst these papers is the Despatch of the Government of India of June 1, 1888, to the Secretary of State, reviewing the proposal which had been already made for the abolition of the "Presidential System of the Indian armies and the substitution of four armies under one Commander-in-Chief," and the reply of the Secretary of State, with other documents connected with this matter.

Important and interesting as the subject is, want of time and pressure on our limited space prevent us from commenting thereon to-day; but there is plenty of matter for study and comment for future issues.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 1.

The British Indian Association, a body representing the landed proprietors of Lower Bengal, has followed the example of the Chamber of Commerce, and has addressed the Government on the subject of the income-tax. Starting with the proposition that it is perfectly impossible to levy income-tax on the profits from goods consigned to India for sale on the consignors' account, the memorial proceeds to sketch the history of direct taxation in India since 1860, and describes it as a record of successive failures to engraft a system confessedly copied from the revenue system of England on the revenue system of India. It adds that the income-tax has been the cause of much discontent, and that it falls with peculiar severity upon the presidency cities—that is, upon the most highly and severely-taxed communities in the Empire. The city of Calcutta, with a population of less than half-a-million, pays more than half of the total income-tax collected from the province of Bengal, with its seventy millions of people, and the same fact is true of the city and presidency of Bombay.

The memorialists allege that if any special cause of discontent exists in Bengal, that cause is the income-tax. They pray that the tax, which was imposed four years ago under great financial pressure and to meet special necessity, may be abandoned as no longer required and as being unsuited to the country, and a permanent cause of harassment and dissatisfaction to the people. There can be no doubt that this memorial represents the general opinion of the Native community, and it is likely that considerable pressure will be brought to bear to induce the Government to give up this unpopular impost.

For some years past it has been a matter of frequent complaint that the Indian High Courts were unable to cope with the work owing to the insufficient number of judges. Attempts have been made from time to time to meet the complaint by appointing temporary additional judges who were again removed as soon as the arrears had been cleared off. This method is obviously unsatisfactory, and it is believed that the Government now contemplates relieving the High Courts by giving largely increased jurisdiction to the Small Cause Courts and empowering them to try cases involving title to land as well as bankruptcy matters, &c. It is understood that the idea is to make the change only in Madras in the first instance, and subsequently to extend it to the other presidencies if the experiment is successful.

It is to be hoped that the Government will proceed very cautiously, for the innovation is not likely to be popular, and the Madras Press is already protesting against it. In a matter of this kind the Government will do well to follow the advice recently tendered to it by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and take care to ascertain the views of all classes interested before initiating projects of legislation, instead of giving the public no notice of its intentions until they are embodied in a Bill and laid before the Legislature.

The Indian marine survey steamer Investigator, which returned to Bombay lately from a surveying cruise, has sent a rich zoological collection both from the shallows and the depths of the Indian seas to the Calcutta Museum, where specimens are now being grouped and arranged for distribution to specialists in Europe to be determined and described. The fish and crustaceans are being reserved to be classified here. Some very productive hauls of the trawl were made in the depths of the Arabian sea, the takes including many specimens of deep-sea fishes and crustaceans. Especially worthy of mention among the latter are two new forms of lobster, a great variety of prawns, and some gigantic creatures of the woodlouse tribe, closely allied, if not identical, with the remarkable creature dredged by the United States steamer Blake in the Gulf of Florida several years ago.

A curious accident occurred some days ago to a mail train on the Southern Mahratta Railway. When near Belgaum station it was completely blown over by a hurricane. Some of the passengers were slightly injured, but no great damage was done. The line is a metre gauge one.

Solomon, the Jew who is charged with defrauding the Bank of Bengal of 11 lakhs of rupees by means of forged opium passes was on Friday committed for trial on charges of forgery and of issuing a forged document. A similar charge against him is pending at the instance of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, which he is alleged to have defrauded of three lakhs of rupees.

There would seem to have been almost an epidemic of bank frauds lately in Calcutta, as last week a warrant was issued on the application of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China against the cashier of a local branch, who is charged with embezzling over four lakhs of rupees.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 1.

A telegram from Fort Tregar states that hot weather, following the recent rains, has produced a serious outbreak of fever. Over eighty men are in hospital there, and sixty at Lungleh.

The official report of the survey work done during the expedition shows that the surveyors attached to the Chittagong column mapped about 5,000 square miles, and those with the Burma column about as much. It has been proved that the Boinu river, six miles west of Haka, is the main stream of the Koladain.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 31.

Cattle disease has been very prevalent during the last two years in numerous districts in Upper Burma. The local Government are making considerable advances to enable cultivators to replace the plough cattle lost. Last year they advanced a lakh and a-half, and this year two lakhs have been advanced for that purpose. Veterinary assistants have been despatched to the infected districts. It is feared that unless the disease abates it will seriously interfere with cultivation.

Sir C. Crosthwaite held a numerously-attended durbar on the 29th inst. A large number of police officers and Burmese officials who had distinguished themselves by attacking or resisting dacoits were presented and rewarded with gold chains, swords of honour, guns, medals, and certificates. A Karen villager who received twelve serious sword wounds in an encounter with dacoits and had been almost hacked to pieces received 200 rupees. His face and body presented a ghastly appearance.

The Chin-Lushai field force, under Brigadier-General Symons, failed to capture or obtain the surrender from the Tashons of the Shwegyobyn Prince, an Alompra pretender, who has given much trouble, and has frequently made raid on British territory. The capture of this man was originally declared to be one of the principal objects of the expedition. It is now reported that the Shwegyobyn Prince has again begun to intrigue with the Tashons.

A serious dacoity has occurred at Pyawbwai, a village a short distance from Rangoon. A Burman police inspector was killed and several houses were looted by dacoits. The villagers behaved pluckily, finally driving off the dacoits and killing two of them.

Several surrenders of dacoit gangs are announced.

The Government survey of the oil-bearing country at Yenangyoung continues. Sixteen square miles have already been surveyed. It is estimated that the whole of the oil-bearing country contains seventy square miles. The rice exported up to May 20th amounted to 677,000 tons, against 645,000 tons at the same date last year.

BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

The half-yearly general meeting of the above company was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday afternoon, Lieutenant-General C. H. Dickens presiding.—The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, stated that in consequence of bad crops, the dividend they proposed to pay was not greatly in excess of that declared at the last meeting. The net earnings for the half-year amounted to about £25,022. This, with sundry receipts and balance brought forward, gave a total of £28,721 to be dealt with. The directors recommended a dividend of £1 6s. 8d. for the half-year, free of Indian, but subject to English income tax. After the payment of this there would remain £351 to be carried forward.—The Revel-gung and Byram Ghat branches, sanctioned at the last meeting, had been put in hand, and the contract with the Secretary of State for working the Tirhoot State Railway had not yet been completed, but they hoped to be in a position to take over that line in the course of a month. They could report no great increase, but as the crops showed signs of improvement he hoped that at their meeting next November they would be enabled to pay a dividend of £2 5s., the same as last year.—Colonel E. L. Marryat, the secretary, gave a highly satisfactory account of his visit to the company's property, and declared that by the exercise of a little more patience they would obtain good results from their investment.—The report, seconded by Mr. D. T. Robertson, was unanimously adopted.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDIAN ARMY LIST.

(Times of India.)

The Quarterly Indian Army List for the current quarter of the year is a portly, well-printed volume, and a very cursory examination of its pages gives one a fair idea of what a vast and complex machine our Indian army has become. Here within the paper covers of a book numbering 750 pages we have the three armies of India side by side, each with its own Commander-in-Chief, its own army of Staff officers, its own Staff Corps, its own races of soldiers, different in creed, caste, and nationality, not even speaking the same language, yet all wearing the same uniform, fighting under the same colours, and all good and loyal soldiers of Her Majesty the Queen. Truly this Indian army of ours, which had such small beginnings, has grown to be a very mighty and perfect machine, and who shall say that the future lying before it may not be as brilliant and glorious as its past? It is not so very long ago since the forces of England in India were represented by "an ensign and thirty men to do honour to the principal agent," which little band, says Captain Broome, in his history of the rise and progress of the Bengal army, may be looked upon as the nucleus of the present extensive forces. Afterwards, John Company, then in his infancy, sanctioned a reinforcement of "a corporal of approved fidelity and courage, with twenty soldiers," who accompanied Mr. Hodges to Bengal as a special escort. And then, in 1757, Clive raised the first regular regiment in Bengal, with its complement of ten companies, each company with its own colour, its two tom-tom-wallahs and one trumpeter, its subedar and three jemadars, its five havildars, and seventy rank and file. There were three British officers to the regiment—a captain, lieutenant, and ensign—who all acted as field officers, and there was also a Native commandant, also mounted; and one can easily imagine that these original battalions, with their ten sets of colours, their liberal supply of tom-toms and trumpets, and profusion of Native officers, must have made a brave show and no little din, as they marched gaily along to begin those conquests that have not ended yet. What a pity it is that there is no continuous history of the Indian army! Was there ever a story more splendid and varied, more full of great deeds and noble courage? Could there be a more striking monument to the genius and energy of the English race than the Indian army with its long roll of glorious achievements? But the story of these deeds is hidden in many histories, and has to be unearthed from countless memoirs of departed warriors. It is all in fragments, and mighty fragments they are; but they need joining and fitting into one harmonious whole worthy of the subject. One wishes that Sir Henry Yule had done it, soldier and scholar as he was, but he gave us other good work, and we must be content. But where shall we get a fitting history of the Indian army? It would need Carlyle's fire, Macaulay's brilliant grouping, the enthusiasm and local knowledge of Kaye, and the soldierly directness of Orme. When such a historian arises, then will justice be done to the Indian army.

THE REGISTRATION OF THE INLAND TRADE OF INDIA.

(Madras Times.)

After many years of patient study, and after conducting a series of more or less successful experiments, the Government of India appears to have arrived at statistics which are considered to afford the means of reviewing India's inland trade with a fair degree of accuracy. For several years past annual returns have been published of India's foreign trade by sea and land. Not only have very valuable statistics been carefully and concisely placed on record, but each year has been the subject of a special "review," in which much light has been thrown upon the true meaning of proverbially misleading figures. These reports and reviews, however, do not touch upon India's inland trade; they do not show the extent of inter-presidential trade, nor of the trade between British possessions and Native States. Thus, an important gap has been left in official statistics, and this the Government has long been trying to fill. Sixteen years ago the Secretary of State for India insisted that information should be systematically collected regarding the inland trade of the country, but it is only now that the Government of India is able to say that a scheme has been elaborated which is likely to allow of the registration of internal traffic along the principal lines of communication. This registration is supplementary to the returns of foreign trade; it traces exports to the source of production, and imports to the localities where they are consumed; it also exhibits the extent to which provinces supply each others' needs. Thus, valuable light is thrown upon such statistics as are already available regarding the area, population and populace of various districts, and, as the Government asserts, "the inland trade returns supply one important means of tracing the economic condition and progress of the several territorial divisions of the Indian Empire, and enable those interested to gauge the trading capacity of each." After trying what are known as the Town and Boundary systems of registration, involving the establishment of a cordon of registering posts round towns or along certain boundaries, the authorities eventually arranged what is termed the Railway system, whereby each of the principal Railway Audit offices tabulates the traffic delivered to consignees on its own line, or passing over this for delivery on minor lines.

Particulars of this system have now been placed before us, and we give a brief sketch of the plan adopted. The entire network of railway communications is divided into blocks corresponding for the most part with Provincial boundaries. In each block the incoming and outgoing trade are registered, so that what appears as outgoing in one must be represented by some incoming figures in another, or others. The three principal offices are located at Jamulpur, Bombay and Lahore. Quarterly returns are supplied by each registering office to the Provincial Government offices, which deal with the subject of inland trade. In the Imperial return, to obviate the appearance of each figure twice, that is in both incoming and outgoing statistics, a simple arrangement of the heading is made, whereby read horizontally, the figures mean exports, and vertically imports. This leaves the total of both heads—imports and export—to be obtained by doubling the sum of the grand total. The chief seaports, it may be noted, are separate "blocks," with the exception that all the seaports of the Madras coast touched by railways are treated as one block under the name of Madras seaports. This includes Madras, Negapatam, Tuticorin and Calicut, as well as the French port of Pondicherry. It is on railway traffic that Government lays the most stress. The trade by road it considers hardly of sufficient general importance anywhere to require permanent registration, but, nevertheless, some steps are taken to register the trade along particular routes, regarding which information may be required in connection with the extension of roads or railways, or for other purposes. The river trade is also daily watched, and, where important, is amalgamated with that by rail in the Imperial returns. It is not claimed that the system is perfect, for in such matters only approximate figures can possibly be arrived at. Weights are carefully ascertained, and then, an allowance being made for packing, values are estimated as closely as possible. In this direction accuracy will become more easy of attainment as time and experience lend their aid. For the present, the Government appears to have arrived at a practicable and fairly satisfactory system; and there seems no reason to doubt that this does, as is thought by those who have the management of it, produce figures which are "fairly representative of the inland traffic as a whole." The mechanism is a little complicated, but the care now taken to arrive at tolerably accurate trade statistics shows that the Government keeps the commercial and agricultural development of the country well in mind. It is not neglecting this branch of its important duties, and time should prove the wisdom of the care it has bestowed upon this particular branch.

FOUND SOBER: MADE DRUNK.

(Mandalay Herald.)

It is the habit of Exeter Hall screamers, and the members of the philanthropic firm of Messrs. Caine and Company, to harrow sensitive humanity at home with asserting that we came to India and found it a sober country, and have made it drunken. Due to some such absurdity, a liquor prohibition is rigidly enforced (on paper) in Upper Burma, by which no one is allowed to sell liquor in any form or shape to Upper Burmans. It is known that Sir Charles Crosthwaite, with his usual hard-headed common sense, has tried to remove the incapable prohibition, but he has been over-ruled by the Secretary of State for India, who appears to know more of the "pros" and "cons" of the subject, without an atom of personal or intimate knowledge on the point, than the Chief Commissioner, who does.

A correspondent with the headquarters of the Southern Burma column of the Chin-Lushai expedition contributes intelligence to a contemporary on the knowledge of liquor among the Chins, which probably with somewhat disturb the equanimity and altogether derange the assertions of those goody-goody intermeddlers, who attribute the taste for intoxicants among our "primitive savages" (!) to the official greed for revenue from the liquor traffic. In writing of the Chins this correspondent says:—

"The people themselves are not an interesting lot: most of them possess a low type of countenance. They are very treacherous and dishonest, dirty in their persons, and terribly addicted to drink. Of their manners and customs it is difficult to gather anything more than has already been published in Blue-books. They have no religion, but believe in spirits. Their marriages are arranged by the parties simply agreeing thereto, and certain presents of mythun or goats being forthcoming from the bride's relatives. They bury their dead in the usual way, finishing up the ceremony by firing off guns in an erratic manner, and drinking. The women do all the daily work, fetch water, hew wood, and help in the fields, as well as the spinning and cooking at home. They smoke all day curious-shaped wooden pipes, in which the nicotine is collected. This liquor is transferred to small flasks and drunk by the men. It is thus the duty of the wife to keep her lord supplied with this obnoxious narcotic which the brutes sip continually." The correspondent also explains how an intoxicating drink is made without the aid of a still:—"There was considerable bustle in the interior of the house, and presently a huge ghurrah or vessel was carried out by two Chins and placed in front of the house. Several vessels of water were then produced, and poured into this large ghurrah, and last of all a syphon tube was adjusted. This we soon learned was wine, or more correctly perhaps, beer, for our special benefit, which these folk make at home, and which is produced on great occasions. This liquor is made from Indian corn and an inferior sort of rice called 'sat,' which they place together in a large vessel, and soak at first with warm water, allowing it to stand about a month, during which time fermentation takes place. When wanted for use, water is added, and a strong, muddy, beer-like liquor is drawn off by means of a syphon. On the occasion referred to above, cups of this concoction were handed round, and all asked to partake of it. A small quantity went a long way with the General and his party, so that plenty remained for our hosts and for the retainers who followed in the General's train: the consequence was that the remainder of the evening was spent in conviviality, and next morning all the guides, interpreters, and slaves were not forthcoming as early as usual."

"Liqueur Nicotine," pure and unadulterated, will be admitted, we think, even by the most frantic total abstainer to be a very much worse tippie than "Liqueur Benedictine," and Chin home brewed—a crude fermented decoction of Indian corn or inferior rice—to Younger's foaming beverages from hops. But such is the irony of fate. While the health-giving and often necessary wines, spirits and beer, manufactured with all the safeguards to health by modern science, are being bellowed at as the liquid demon of ruin to such people as those inhabiting our Indian Empire, the people are left to sip nicotine and drink the fermented abominations from Indian corn, rice, and the barks of trees, to satisfy an appetite that exists in spite of the ruin to health and life these poisonous decoctions must bring in their train.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

(Indian Daily News.)

The Madras Mail continues to denounce the impolicy, as the paper considers it, of the order to disband three regiments of Madras Native Infantry which is now being carried out. The effect of allowing men of the disbanded battalions to volunteer for service in the remaining Madras infantry regiments is said to be that "each surviving regiment will be reminded by the arrival of transferred Sepoys of the fate of the disbanded regiments, and think of a similar fate impending in other corps." Generally our contemporary regards the disbandments as "a grave strategic error," and declares that "no better method of taking heart out of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of what remains of the Coast Army could be devised." This sort of criticism seems to us to cut more ways than one. As regards the policy of drafting the disbanded Sepoys who are willing to volunteer for further service into the remaining regiments we have the fact admitted that these regiments are below their strength. That being so it may be accepted, we should think, as prima facie desirable that the gaps in their ranks should be filled by trained men—such men being available—rather than by raw recruits, even if the latter could be readily obtained, and it would appear they cannot. Any feeling of disappointment and apprehension consequent upon the disbandment would be increased rather than diminished, one may reasonably suppose, if the whole of the men were turned loose to seek fresh employment where and how they could, instead of being offered the chance of further service. If the remaining regiments are really constituted of such material as our contemporary represents—so ready and liable to become disaffected and discontented, the fact might be cited to support an argument for an extension of the policy of disbandment more appropriately than in condemnation of what has already been done in that direction. We are aware, of course, that the Mail condemns the whole policy, and insists that a better and wiser plan would be to set about improving the Madras Army instead of wiping it out by disbandment. The present plan of dealing with the subject, we are told, 'amounts neither more nor less to a great affront to what has been in its day a very fine, useful army, and which might, if adequately paid, officered, and pensioned, be again made a valuable force.' Thus it is admitted by its friends and champions that the Madras Army cannot be regarded as in a satisfactory condition, and that there was need for something to be done. In estimating the value of the scheme of reform which has recommended itself to the Government of India, it is as well to bear in mind the fact that the chief adviser of the Government on such matters just now—the present Commander-in-Chief in India—is an authority whose special knowledge of the Madras Army, as well as his general experience and capacity, should suggest great confidence in his judgment. It is so unlikely as to border on the impossible that any amount of adverse criticism such as the Mail indulges in will influence the Government to alter a decision deliberately arrived at, and already given effect to; and as regards the future, it would probably be more wholesome and useful for "what remains of the Coast Army" to impress upon officers and men the prime necessity for accepting the lesson as an incentive to improvement, than to foster a weak feeling of soreness and sense of injustice, tending to cripple effort and injure the reputation of the Madras as a soldier beyond the hope of recovery.

CEYLON TEA IN RUSSIA.

(Ceylon Observer.)

We are not so sure that the wiser course for the Tea Fund Committee—or special Sub-Committee—will be to subsidise an agent to visit Russia itself, in place of sending one with samples to claim the attention of the Russian tea buyers at the China ports. We can quite see how the difference in estimated outlay—Rs. 2,000 against Rs. 4,000—affected the latter proposal, and we may be inclined to agree that the latter amount was rather too much to venture on the China experiment. But it does not follow that visiting Russia will do much good. For one thing, it has been done to some extent already, without much result. We know of one or two gentlemen who have tried to introduce Ceylon tea in this way—in one case a Swede, long resident in Russia, speaking both English and Russian languages well, tried to do business with tea dealers in Moscow. But he found the trade a close monopoly, and that great jealousy was at once aroused by any fresh intruders, and that his samples, however good, scarcely received any attention simply because they had not come in the regular course of trade. Indeed, many of his samples were never allowed to pass through the Custom House at all.

On the other hand, our object in trying to get at the Russian buyers in China would just be to allay any such feeling of jealousy or intrusion. The Ceylon agent would say:—"We want you to examine our teas and to come and buy for your constituents in the Colombo, as well as, or instead of, the China market." However, to send a special agent simply on such a trip may rightly be regarded as too expensive in view of uncertainty of result. But what is to hinder the Tea Committee drawing up a circular letter for the Russian buyers, inviting them to visit the Colombo tea market either on their way out or home, and accompanying such letter in each case by a small box of samples of our finest teas? The names and addresses of the principal buyers can, we suppose, be got—the agent of the Russian Volunteer Fleet may be able to help—and the course now proposed has, at least, the recommendation of being very inexpensive.

THE BOMBAY AND PERSIAN TRADE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

That Bombay, and not London, must be the headquarters of any great trade with Persia is self-evident. Even without the traditional connection with Persia maintained by the enterprising Parsee community with their co-religionists in Iran, the geographical position of Bombay must give this city the virtual monopoly of the trade which may be created in the Provinces to which the Karun will give access. This is an additional reason for entrusting to the Indian Government the direct control of the diplomatic relations with Persia. Everyone realises how fatuous it would have been to accredit a minister from London to the friendly Prince who rules in Cabul. And yet it can scarcely be contended that Persian politics and Persian trade are less directly matters of Indian interest than the politics of Afghanistan, which are watched and controlled, not from London, but from Simla. The present arrangement is not more against policy than against tradition. In the early half of the century Persian affairs were regarded as coming peculiarly within the cognisance of the Government of India, and it was to Persia that Lord Wellesley looked when, fearing a new Afghan invasion, he sought for an ally who could keep the Ameer in check in case it were necessary. It was not in London, but in India, that the policy was devised and carried out of despatching Sir John Malcolm to Teheran to negotiate a treaty of offence and defence with the Shah against the then ruler of Cabul. In Lord Minto's time Persia was just as much deemed to be within the range of the foreign policy of the Government of India. It is true that Sir Harford Jones's Embassy was despatched from London, but the Peace of Tilsit had unexpectedly detached Russia from England, the Ambassador's route via St. Petersburg was deemed dangerous, and the Governor-General of India felt that he was in no wise deterred by Sir Harford Jones's mission from once more sending Sir John Malcolm to Teheran. "The growing necessity of the case in Asia" was urged by Lord Minto as a sufficient reason for sending Sir John Malcolm from India, even though it was known at the time that an ambassador was on his way from the Court of St. James's. The fact that it was mainly in honour of Sir John Malcolm, the Envoy of the Indian Government, that the Persian Order of the Lion and Sun was instituted, shows how strong was the influence that was exerted in Persia from the Indian side in the old days. Even now the semi-consular appointments in the Persian Gulf and the regions thereabout—the Residencies at Bushire, at Bussorah, at Muscat, and at Bagdad—are held by Indian political officers and detachments from Indian regiments are posted there. The Foreign Office treats Persia, in theory, as within its own jurisdiction, but it does not supply these posts from its Consular staff. All that Mr. Curzon asks, therefore, is that the British representation in those parts should be put upon a logical basis; that the predominating interests of India in Persia should be recognised more completely, and that we should go back to the tradition of the old days, when British influence at Teheran was a reality, because it was exercised by the Government which is most directly concerned in the policy of Persia, and whose agents are best fitted for watching and advising upon it.

SANDHURST IN INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

It is the influence of considerations such as these which has kept back the military authorities hitherto from doing anything to provide a place in the Service for the young men of the upper classes, whose exclusion from their hereditary profession of arms has long been a recognised blot upon our administration. But just as the way seemed to be more than ever blocked, the increasing demands upon the professional training and capacity of a military officer putting the position every year more out of reach of the Native gentleman, the movement for reorganising the forces of the Native States opens a new door to such aspirations, and seems as if it must create a demand for the services of the Native gentlemen who will take the trouble to qualify themselves for the profession. In this direction probably lies the sphere of the Indian Sandhurst. But as for the Native officer, as we know him, what scope is there for improving his position and imparting to his capabilities the stimulus of ambition and hope? There are those who point to his defects, and hold that he cannot be trusted with higher powers than he now possesses: but this is surely a curiously erratic argument. The defects of Native officers are the results of their position. While they are confined to wholly subordinate positions they cannot be expected to develop the qualities of command, and the sense of responsibility. At any rate, let them be tried before pronouncing them hopeless. And of all the machinery for putting the experiment in practice none seems to be so favourable as the scheme which has been often mooted, and which we believe was favoured by the Government of India, of creating two or three battalions which should be entirely commanded by Native officers. By this means the difficulties that must beset any amalgamation of British and Native officers on the same terms are avoided, and the latter would have the best possible chance of proving what they were worth. At the same time, promotion into these battalions would hold out a prospect of advancement to the Native commissioned ranks all through the Army. So strong are the arguments in favour of the scheme that we should probably have seen it in force before this but for the consideration of expense. It was too expensive a matter in these days to break up an existing battalion, or create a new one, for the sake of an experiment, however promising. Now, however, the case is altered. There are new corps being made up in Burma, and a large levy is being raised for trans-frontier service in Zhob. Either of these places seems to offer the desired opportunity. Is it too late to ask whether means cannot be taken to profit by the occasion to give a fair chance to an experiment so full of importance to the welfare and progress of the Native Army?

TEMPERANCE IN THE ARMY.

(Madras Mail.)

It has of late been widely stated that Temperance is largely on the increase among British troops in India owing chiefly to the introduction of regimental institutes, which provide for soldiers other and less innocuous methods of spending the long hours between the evening parade and the roll call than imbibing large quantities of rum and beer in the regimental canteen. The assumption that the principles of moderation in drinking are more generally prevalent than in former years appears, however, to be based on the opinions of a few individual officers, whose observations have led them to believe that in their own particular corps the consumption of malt liquor and spirits, particularly the latter, has very much decreased. This may be the case, but it does not follow from this that the improvement is so general throughout the Army as is assumed. Indeed, the statistics available for testing the truth of this assumption do not, unfortunately, bear out the theory that soldiers are more temperate than formerly. The most reliable method of ascertaining the actual progress made in this direction is by taking the value of rum and malt liquor sold to the troops by the Commissariat Department during the last three years. In Bengal malt liquor to the value of 26½ lakhs was issued to the troops in 1887-88; in the following year the value rose to 27 lakhs, and in the year just completed to 28 lakhs, or an increased consumption during the latter year to the value of 1½ lakhs of rupees. To partly compensate for this, there has been a slight decrease in the consumption of rum. In 1887-88 the value of the rum issued to troops in Bengal was Rs. 1,67,000, which fell to Rs. 1,40,000 in the following year, and rose to Rs. 1,60,000 in 1889-90. The improvement is therefore represented by a smaller consumption to the value of Rs. 7,000 only amongst nearly 45,000 soldiers. In Madras, the value of the malt liquor supplied during the three years was 8½ lakhs in 1887-88, 8 lakhs in the following year, and 7½ lakhs in 1889-90; or a falling-off in the value of the quantity sold to the extent of 1½ lakhs, owing probably to the employment of Madras troops in Burma. The value of the rum supplied during the same period was Rs. 85,000 in 1887-88, Rs. 70,000 in the year following, and only Rs. 55,000 in 1889-90, representing a decrease in consumption of about 35 per cent. In Bombay, the consumption of both malt liquor and rum was slightly higher in 1889-90 than in either of the two preceding years, the value of the malt liquor supplied being 8½ lakhs in 1887-88, and Rs. 8,60,000 in 1889-90, and of rum Rs. 38,000 in the former year, and Rs. 40,000 in the latter. If we take the whole of India we find that the expenditure on malt liquor during last year was Rs. 1,000 more than in 1887-88, and that on rum Rs. 35,000 less, the latter being almost entirely due to the decrease in the consumption of rum in this Presidency. In Bengal, the average annual expenditure per man of the established strength is Rs. 63 on malt liquor and Rs. 3½ on rum; in Madras, Rs. 55 on malt liquor and Rs. 4 on rum; in Bombay Rs. 70 on malt liquor and Rs. 4 on rum. The actual average expenditure per man is probably slightly higher, as the establishment is rarely up to its full strength. Although the figures given do not show that considerable decrease in the consumption of malt liquor and spirits by the troops in India which is supposed to be taking place, still they do not indicate that intemperance is generally prevalent in the army.

BENGAL.

(May 14.)

THE news from the Dacca Koddahs is extremely satisfactory. Mr. Savi has captured no fewer than 247 elephants in his last expedition.

MEASURES are at present being taken by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta for the establishment of a Bishopric at Lucknow; but unless the new diocese is willing to subscribe an endowment of Rs. 800 a month, the Bishopric cannot be founded.

THE idea of having a Civil Service Cup Race in the autumn in view to anticipate the Calcutta Pony Races has been abandoned. The terms of the race have however, been altered. The changes are that it will be open to country-breds of 14 hands and other classes 13-3 and under, while English and Australian ponies will carry 4lbs. extra on the allotted weight; previous winners of the Cup to carry 7lbs., in addition to other penalties.

THE Calcutta Gazette contains the following notification:—"It is with deep regret that the Lieutenant-Governor has to announce the death, on the 2nd of May, of Mr. C. P. L. Macaulay, C.I.E., who had just returned from England to take up the post of officiating Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal. By his death, at the early age of forty, the Government have lost an officer of distinguished merit and ability, and one who, from an early stage of his career, had given proofs of high administrative capacity. Mr. Macaulay had been associated for many years with the administration of Bengal, and the Lieutenant-Governor desires to place on record his high sense of Mr. Macaulay's services, and his keen regret at his untimely death."

A DARJEELING correspondent writes to a contemporary:—"The Amban, Mr. Chi, General Chang, and their suite all left Darjeeling for Lhasa at midday on Saturday last (3rd), accompanied by Mr. Macartney, the interpreter, who goes with them as far as the frontier. Mr. Paul follows them shortly, probably on Tuesday or Wednesday (7th). Before they left there was a sort of formal reception and leave-taking in the theatre at Jellapahar. All the beauty and fashion of the station was there, and plenty of champagne flowing. The troops were all turned out, and lined the road from the guard-room down the hill up to the theatre. The battery fired salutes just as the Chinamen were all mounting their mules, and the effect can better be imagined than described. Mr. Ludlow leaves this definitely on Tuesday, the 6th, for Calcutta, en route for Pekin, bearing with him the treaty for the Emperor's approval.

ENGINEERS engaged on the East Coast Railway Survey seem to have a pleasant time of it, judging from a letter sent to a contemporary from Waltair. The correspondent describes the attractions of this favoured spot as superior to those of Darjeeling, especially for those suffering from liver diseases peculiar to Bengal. With excusable rapture, says the Englishman, he writes:—"We get all the dainties of the sea, fresh and cheap—oysters, crabs, prawns, pomfrets, &c., and last, but not least, a real fresh cool seabreeze day and night. Houses right on the sea need neither punkahs nor mosquito nets." If the picture is not to a large extent imaginary, there ought to be a site on the East Coast for another temporary home for the itinerant Government of India. A maritime capital might be utilised on the way from Calcutta to Simla, and perhaps some day the Government might shrink from the journey into space, and settle down quietly in its cottage by the sea.

In a letter addressed to the Government of India the Bengal Chamber of Commerce have drawn forcible attention to the delay which not unfrequently takes place in consulting the Chamber and other public bodies on measures which the Government is about to introduce. At present the practice is not to call for outside opinions until suggestions for amending existing laws, or enacting new ones, have assumed a definite form, as Bills actually or about to be introduced into the Legislative Councils. This system, the Chamber say, is open to two objections. The "statement of objects and reasons" is too meagre to sufficiently explain what has induced Government to cause the Bill to be prepared, and the Government by putting forward a Bill is often in a position from which it finds it difficult to retire. In the opinion of the Committee these disadvantages might be greatly lessened if all proposals for alteration, at least in mercantile laws, were submitted when received by Government to those who would be affected by them for their opinion. Men immersed in business find it difficult to follow with minute care the technical terminology of a proposal ready for legislation. The same arguments apply with greater force to rules which, under the sanction of the law, the Government is in many instances left to frame as the machinery for working a particular law.

MADRAS.

M. LE JEMBLE, Procureur-General, French Indian Colonies, died at Pondicherry on the evening of the 7th. He had been suffering from a severe fever, which apparently affected his brain. On the evening of his death he fell downstairs, fracturing his arm. He was removed to hospital, where he succumbed. He was in his forty-sixth year.

At the High Court of Saigon, judgment in the suit brought by Mr. Derry, railway contractor, against the Secretary of State, for over eight lakhs, was given in favour of the defendant. Plaintiff has to bear the costs. It is believed that Mr. Derry intends to appeal.

Subscriptions are being invited at Madras on account and on behalf of the survivors of the Charge of the Light Brigade, several of whom, as reported last mail, are in a destitute condition.

It is believed that the acting appointment of Consulting Engineer for Railways in Madras, which was vacant by Colonel Smith's absence on leave, will be filled by Lieutenant-Colonel Gracey, Superintending Engineer, Villapuram-Guntakul State Railway, who will hold the appointment until the return of Major Coaker from leave.

CAPTAIN BADDELEY, Under-Secretary to Government, Public Works Department, who has just recovered from a severe attack of influenza, proceeds home on the 25th instant on three months' privilege leave.

THE system, so beneficial to agriculturists in other parts of India, of payment of land revenue by postal money orders, is to be tried in four districts of the Madras Presidency, whose collectors are to report on its working after one year. The local Postmaster-General has framed rules and forms which the Board of Revenue has approved.

THE revenue returns in the Madras Presidency for the eight months ending with February are very satisfactory, considering the partial failure of the crops in certain districts. There is a total increase, compared with the previous year, of eleven lakhs of rupees, excluding the taxes on salt and spirituous liquors, and of this amount seven lakhs are credited to cesses and land revenue.

MR. SANDERSON, Superintendent of Government Kheddah Operations in Mysore, arrived in Madras on the 6th inst., with eighteen tuskers, purchased in Burma for utilisation in the operations in Mysore. There was a great crowd on the beach to see the landing of the elephants. This is the largest import of elephants for some years. The animals are in splendid condition.

MINING operations at the Kolar Gold Field were greatly interfered with last month by the prevalence of influenza among the miners. A large number of coolies yielded to panic, and returned to their homes in Malabar and elsewhere, and of those who remained on the field a large proportion were incapacitated from work for several days, and many of them are not yet convalescent. There was also much sickness among the English and Italians. The month was thus in some respects the worst that has been experienced since mining operations were commenced by the companies now on the field. Heavy rain has lately fallen, and materially reduced the temperature, which ranged very high during the greater part of last month, and the general position of affairs is now improving, so it is hoped that the coolies who took to flight will soon return.

BOMBAY.

(May 16.)

MR. J. MACPHERSON, B.A., barrister-at-law, acts as Advocate-General during the absence of the Hon. F. L. Latham.

MR. N. R. OLIVER, Assistant Collector of Salt Revenue and Assistant British Delegate for the Anglo-Portuguese Treaty, is allowed leave on medical certificate for one year.

MR. M. C. LECKIE is appointed to act as First Class Assistant Collector, Salt Revenue, Goa Range, and Assistant to the British Delegate for the Anglo-Portuguese Treaty, during the absence of Mr. N. R. Oliver.

ON the recommendation of a Medical Board, Colonel T. Walker, Superintendent, Gun Carriage Factory, is permitted to proceed to England on furlough, in anticipation of furlough to be granted him by Government.

MR. VURJEEWANDAS MADHAVDAS has set apart a lakh of rupees for the purpose of building a sanatorium for the use of the members of his community. The sanatorium, the foundation-stone of which was laid on Saturday last on a hill at Sion, will be named after Mr. Runchordas, the deceased son of Mr. Vurjeevandas.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season report for the past week:—Rain in parts of Kurrachee, Shikarpore, Upper Sind Frontier, Poona, Sholapur, Bijapur, Belgaum, Dharwar, and Kanara. Standing crops good. Harvesting of late crops completed in most districts, progressing in others. Preparations for next season's crop continue generally. Fodder scarce in one taluka of Nassik, Poona, and Dharwar; water scarce in four talukas of Nassik, and one of Dharwar. Agricultural stock good except in Nassik, and one taluka of Hyderabad.

A PLEASANT gathering took place in the Byculla Press a few days back, the occasion being the presentation of a testimonial to Mr. J. T. Lewis, one of the assistant managers, and one well known to authors in Bombay, who went home by Friday's mail steamer on sick leave after nearly ten years' close service in the Press. The address, which was written in English and Sanskrit (the verses in the latter part being ably recited by one of the learned Shastris of the Press), having been delivered, a handsome goblet, bearing the inscription, "Presented to J. T. Lewis as a token of esteem by his fellow-workmen," was given to him. Both Mr. Taylor, the Superintendent, and Mr. Poole, the Assistant Superintendent, were present. The former made a very happy speech, and spoke in terms of high commendation of the recipient of the honours of the day, and hoped he would soon return restored to health. Next came the agreeable duty of drinking healths, followed by the pretty Indian custom of flower decoration, and the distribution of attar and pan, and the company, after expressing their good wishes to Mr. Lewis, dispersed, first giving three hearty cheers for Mr. Taylor, the Superintendent of the Press.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAUB.

(May 14.)

SIR ROBERT HUME, the genial General who is still well remembered at Allahabad and Lahore, intends returning to this country to take up his residence, probably at Mussoorie.

THERE appears to be some chance at last of the Artesian well at Lucknow proving a success. Some 1,300 feet have been dug out, and water can now be thrown up within six feet of mother earth. It is hoped that another 100 feet of digging will make the undertaking a fait accompli.

MR. WAY, Agent of the Kalka-Umballa Railway, has just returned from Simla to Kalka. Definite arrangements for an extension of the line to Simla may be shortly expected. The proposed line will most likely be a two-foot six-inch gauge, and will not interfere with the present cart road, and will probably include half a mile of tunnels.

MR. YOUNGHUSBAND, the Engineer who is looking after the Simla Water Works, has completed an examination of the springs as far as Narkanda, but except for a supply which exists at one point some 600 feet below the level of the present pipes, and which might be utilised by means of pumps, apparently there is not much prospect of increasing the present supply from new sources.

THE Alliance Bank of Simla has a good balance-sheet to show for the last half of 1889. After paying a bonus of Rs. 9,192 to the staff, there remained a net profit of Rs. 68,947. Rs. 30,000 of this was used in declaring a dividend of 12 per cent. Rs. 20,000 was added to the Reserve Fund, raising it to Rs. 3,30,000. Rs. 10,000 was added to the doubtful debt fund, and the balance carried forward to the next account.

LAST year there was a general invasion of locusts throughout Northern India, and in Rajpootana and Sind especially their ravages wrought considerable havoc among the standing crops. Though, however, the locusts have thus an evil repute among the cultivators, little has hitherto been done to mark their characteristics and record the history of their various inroads. With a view to remedying this defect, says the Pioneer, two short preliminary notes are now being circulated by Mr. Cotes, who has charge of the Entomological Section of the Indian Museum, giving all the chief points that are already known about the pests, in the hope that residents in different parts of the country will come forward to supplement this information from their personal observations. In this way Mr. Cotes hopes to be able to supply a tolerably complete and detailed account of the various species which have at various times invaded India. The result is likely to be a monograph as interesting as it will be useful.

BURMA.

(May 10.)

A Rangoon correspondent states that a Burman is building a Roman Catholic Cathedral at Mandalay, which promises to be the finest ecclesiastical edifice in Burma. This is certainly a new departure, and deserves to be recorded as a remarkable result of missionary enterprise in the land of Buddhist worship.

The Rangoon authorities have received information from Lieutenant Daly, Superintendent of the Northern Shan States, that the Thebaw Tsawbwa has withdrawn his previous resignation, and will continue to administer his State as long as his two sons are in England.

Papers received by the last mail from Rangoon record the death of Dr. Forchhammer, who was regarded as one of the most scholarly men the province had ever seen. As Professor of Pali in the Government College his duties were faithfully performed, but the work in which he most delighted was that in connection with his appointment as Government Archaeologist. In spite of ill-health, he explored Pegu, Sittang, Kyaikto, Arracan, Pagan, and other districts, and the Government Press is at present engaged in publishing the valuable results of his investigations.

A RANGOON telegram, dated May 5, to a contemporary states:—"The Fenn cross-suits for divorce are down for early hearing in the Recorder's Court. Meantime Mrs. Fenn's counsel has applied for a Commission to examine in Bombay Captain Campbell, her brother-in-law, and Captain Hext, with a view to the production of certain correspondence. The opposing counsel obtained a postponement for a week, alleging that the matters have no bearing on the case. The case will be heard in camera. Rangoon has two divorce cases just now. While that mentioned in the above telegram concerns parties connected with the Indian Marine, the petitioner and co-respondent in the other are members of the Rangoon harbour and pilot service."

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—There was a further reduction on Saturday of 1-16 in Mysore, Ooregum, and Nundydroog Shares, and of 1s. in Champion Reef. Mysore Shares were last quoted 5 7-16 to 5 9-16, Nundydroog 1½ to 2, Indian Consolidated 1s. to 1s. 6d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 8s. 6d. to 9s., Ooregum Ordinary 2 to 2½, ditto Preference 1½ to 1¾, Devala-Moyar 2s. 6d. to 3s., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 8s. 6d. to 9s., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., South-East Mysore 1s. to 1s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 6d. to 1s., Gold Fields of Mysore 9s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., New South-East Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

OBITUARY.

—O—

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM ILBERT BIRDWOOD, R.E., Madras, and J.P., whose death, in the 82nd year of his age, has just been announced, was one of the oldest surviving officers of the late East India Company, on their Madras establishment. He was the son of the Rev. William Ilbert Birdwood, and was born at Slapton Vicarage, South Devon, on June 22nd, 1808. He was entered at Addiscombe in 1825, and was appointed to the Madras Engineers on January 9th, 1827, and after passing through the grades of assistant civil engineer and civil engineer in various divisions of the Madras Presidency was, on March 14th, 1840, appointed to the corps of Madras Sappers and Miners attached to the Chinese Expeditionary Force of 1840-41. He served with them at the capture of Chusan, July 5th, 1840; at the bombardment and capture of the Bogue Forts, February 26th, 1841; at the action of the "First Bar," February 27th; at the destruction of the forts and batteries at and above Whampoa, and at the action of Canton, May 25th; at the capture of Amoy, August 26th and 27th; at the recapture of Chusan, October 1st, 1841; and was with the British army until the close of the war under the walls of Nanking, receiving the medal for China. On returning to Madras he served as superintending engineer in different circles of the Presidency; and was finally appointed chief engineer and secretary to the Government of Madras in the Public Works Department, which office he held at the time of his retirement, September 1st, 1863, from which date he resided at Woodcot, Salcombe, South Devon, where he died on the 27th ult.

GENERAL FREDERIC BRINE, late of the Royal Engineers, who died on Friday last, at his residence, 31, Thurloe-place, South Kensington, at the age of 60, was the son of Major Brine, late of the 7th Royal Fusiliers, of Claremount, Sidmouth, and was born in June, 1829, entering the Army in October, 1847. He received his lieutenant's commission in November, 1850, and served as a volunteer in the Crimean campaign from the 5th of July, 1855, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and the battle of the Tchernaya. For his services he received the medal with clasp, as well as the Turkish medal. He was also present with Colonel Neale, Her Majesty's Minister, in the flagship Euryalus at the naval engagement under Vice-Admiral Kuper off Japan, including the attacks on the shore batteries on the 15th and 16th of August, 1863. For his conspicuous services during the Chinese engagements he was thanked in despatches, breveted a major, and created a Knight of the Tower and Sword of Portugal. He reached the rank of a colonel in April, 1873, retiring in May, 1884, with the rank of major-general. The deceased officer married, in 1854, Susan, only surviving child of Major Lecky, late of the 20th Light Dragoons, of Milton Lodge, county Londonderry. The funeral is appointed to take place to-morrow. He was to have presided at the annual dinner of the Balloon Society on Saturday. He had received the society's gold medal for crossing the Channel.

QUACKERY AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Writing on the subject of unqualified medical practitioners in India, and the danger which surrounds their ignorant treatment of serious ailments, the Calcutta Medical Record says:—The unrestricted system of quackery that prevails everywhere is a public calamity. The most lamentable cases occur every now and again of culpable maltreatment of unfortunate persons at the hands of pretenders who pass with their victims as duly qualified practitioners. Calcutta and most cities in India are literally overrun with quacks. Every form of charlatanry is rampant. Side by side with this hydra there are no less than 400 qualified physicians and surgeons in Calcutta. The bulk of these have been educated in the colleges founded by the Government. The State has laid down rules and regulations for the course of study in these institutions. It appoints its own teachers. It demands and receives certain fees from students, whom it invites and encourages to place themselves freely into its hands to undergo a long, tedious, expensive, and perfect course of training in the science and art of medicine. The State demands and receives fees for the examinations it has ordained as a distinctive evidence of fitness to practise the calling of a physician. The State virtually does all in its power to make these men believe in the honesty and integrity of its intentions to provide them with a passport to earn a living; but it withholds its protection from such passports, and thus practically nullifies all its promises, crushes the hopes, and damns the prospects of those whom it has deluded into crediting its diplomas as being worth something, when in reality they are worth nothing, since the holder of a State Diploma has no better position before the public nor in the eyes of the State than the man who practises medicine without a diploma. The State actually declines to acknowledge the certificates of these men in the case of its officers and servants who may elect to be treated at their hands in times of illness. Herein is a huge deception and fraud which the State is annually perpetrating. It would be better (till the State places a proper value and a protective safeguard on its Medical Diplomas) to close our medical colleges rather than to let our students learn when it is too late that they have wasted their time, money, and vital energy in obtaining a State Diploma, only to awaken to a knowledge that this document, bearing the seal of the Government University and the signature of the Director of Public Instruction, is of no more value to them than to earn an honest livelihood than the dangerous and fatal ignorance of the quack whose practices the Government not only ignores but tolerates. Such is the verdict against the Government, and the serious indictment laid at its doors ought to awaken it to a sense of its duty and enforce upon it the moral necessity, aside from the great public demand there is for legislative interference, for the suppression of quackery and the recognition of the legitimate rights and privileges of qualified physicians and surgeons.

MEASURING A TIGER.

There are two ways of measuring the length of this beast of the forest. One is the naturalist's way, and the other the sportsman's. A naturalist, in his measurement, discards the tail or measures it separately; but a sportsman would take in head, trunk, tail and all, and the longer the tail the more would his heart expand. And the sportsman has yet another resource, or rather a series of resources, to make his tiger look longer and the figure in his note-book appear more decent. The naturalist proceeds directly to measure his tigers in a straight line, but the sportsman delights to follow the bends, the sinuosities and the curves presented by the head, the neck, the back, and the tail of his prey, and lovingly and lingeringly measures it along those lines. Further, the suppleness of the body of the feline race is well-known. In the attempt to get a natural attitude, neither contracted nor elongated, in the case of a cat when taking its length, it is quite easy to make it an inch too long or an inch too short. What means an inch in a domestic cat means a foot or more in a royal tiger. Besides, sportsmen do not always measure the animal on the spot where it has fallen, but employ a fitting occasion for the purpose. In the meantime the tiger is brought to camp, stretched, as is perhaps the case, across an elephant's back; and the elephant's back acts as a wonderful stretcher of a tiger's carcass. Again, other sportsmen are in the habit of measuring not the carcass of the animal, but its skin, after it has come from the cleaning and stretching process. Further there is the danger of not jotting down the measurement of the tiger immediately in a note-book, but trusting to memory for entering the figure on a convenient occasion. In the interim the memory becomes treacherous, and the measurement acquires elasticity. These are some of the causes which, perhaps, explain the disparity apparent in the measurements made of a "full-grown" Bengal tiger by the cold, calculating naturalist, and the hot-blooded sportsman. Thus the maximum length of a "full-grown" Bengal varies from the 10 feet 4 inches of the one to the 13 feet, 15 feet, and event 18 feet and a few inches of the other.

THE FENN DIVORCE CASE.

On Friday, 2nd May, before Mr. W. F. Agnew, Recorder of Rangoon, Mr. VanSomeren applied for commission to issue to Bombay for the examination of Captain Campbell, Mrs. Fenn's brother-in-law, and Captain Hext, Director of Indian Marine, with the view of producing certain correspondence that took place between Captain Fenn and the above-named two gentlemen on the matter in dispute. He had an affidavit in support of the application.

Mr. Moylan asked that the matter stand over for a week. He had received a brief note from his learned friend, Mr. VanSomeren, to the effect that he was about to make the application for a commission, but he never sent copies of the affidavit or grounds of application. He (Mr. Moylan) did not know those grounds, but according to his instructions the gentlemen referred to were required to be examined on matters that could have no bearing in the case. He would like to be in a position to oppose the application.

Mr. VanSomeren said he could not object to Mr. Moylan's desire for an adjournment. He had fully intended to supply him with copies, but through some cause or other this was omitted.

The application was then adjourned for a week.—Rangoon Times.

INDIAN RAILWAY POLICY.

THE Civil and Military Gazette, the most important English paper published nearest the North-West Frontier of India, has a very sensible article on the question of railway extension and expenditure in India. Our contemporary is of opinion that the time has come when the Government of India should more clearly enunciate its railway policy, there being signs that before long it will have to say what further outlay is intended to be made on purely strategic lines intended to perfect the system of frontier defence.

It is curious to note the change which has come over the Lahore journal in its views of immediate Russian advance on India, and the necessity of the most extensive preparations for meeting it. Some years ago, when the able author of the "Eastern Menace," Colonel Arthur Cory, was one of the editorial staff, the paper was continually sending forth notes of alarm and warnings which disturbed the minds of many frontier officials, and more than once ruffled the equanimity of the Punjab Government. The gallant Colonel was himself thoroughly convinced not only of the evil designs of Russia upon India, but of the thorough ability of Russia to carry them out immediately; and so he continued to play as long as he was able to do so the part of a Russophobic Cassandra, prophesying all manner of woes and disasters if England did not take steps without delay to curb Muscovite ambition. He rejoiced when Lord Lytton gave the order for the invasion of Afghanistan, and he thoroughly upheld that nobleman's policy, which gave to England the experience of another costly Afghan war—costly in blood and treasure. The Colonel would have preferred a war with Russia itself, and would have recommended even an expedition to Moscow similar to that undertaken by the great Napoleon, but as this could not conveniently be, his pen had to content itself in inditing inflammatory Russophobic philippics. It is curious—but not unsatisfactory—to find that a newspaper which was at one time designated by Sir Lepel Griffin as "a firebrand on the Frontier" asks the question to-day, "Are we not in danger of overdoing our Frontier Defences?" It evidently thinks that question could be now answered in the affirmative, and it gives very sensible reasons for coming to that conclusion. Here are some of them:—

"If we listen to some military experts they will tell us that the frontier, to be absolutely safe, must be covered with forts at every point of importance, and that the hills must be pierced by roads and railways at every important pass, so that troops may be moved with rapidity to any threatened ground. There can be no doubt that this is going too far under the existing circumstances of Russian power of offence. From a practical point of view it seems to us that, if our defences get far ahead of our adversary's means of attack, we have invested capital unnecessarily, and we are disposed to believe there may be a tendency amongst the younger school of military advisers of Government to err on the side of safety. This may be very commendable; but now things have arrived at a point from which we can afford to look round and really arrive at some definite conclusion on the subject by comparing our known power of defence with Russia's possible power of attack in the early future."

We may allow with our contemporary that so long as Russia has a choice of routes open to her to advance against India, so long will it be necessary to guard those routes, but that it is not necessary to have a fort on every hill or a railway in every pass. But this is what some military engineers and strategists would advocate, and in the meantime India itself suffers from the non-completion of trunk lines and feeders to them, vast tracts of country remaining still undeveloped for want of railway construction and extension. Our contemporary very rightly regards it as altogether wrong and misleading that military railway expenditure in India should be recorded against the Budget grant for railways generally, it being really a military expenditure proper as much as if it were for barracks or forts. "While Government," says the article, "maintains a separate department under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief for the construction and maintenance of military works, we fail to see why purely military railways should be placed in the same category as productive military works. They can in no sense be regarded as works tending to the direct development of the resources of India, and by being a burden on the railway finances, they serve to frighten away possible investors in schemes of a commercial nature."

This is so far true, but we fear that our contemporary is rather too sanguine in expecting that English capitalists look upon Indian railway extension as a "lucrative investment"—if left to be undertaken by private enterprise, and for commercial purposes only. Unfortunately, the idea has not died out in money circles at home that Indian railways will not pay unless under a Government guarantee. Others may not be of this opinion, but so long as it is an opinion, finding weight among English capitalists, so long will it be difficult to bring private commercial enterprise to aid in developing the resources of India by construction and extension of railways throughout the country where wanted.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE appointment of second-in-command in the several corps of Sappers and Miners is to be forthwith abolished.

It has been decided that furlough on private affairs out of India to non-commissioned officers of the British service can only be granted by Government in special and exceptional cases.

ORDERS have been issued for the extension to the Madras Presidency of the practice obtaining in the Bengal and Bombay Presidencies of paying men of the Native Army while absent from their regiments on sick leave.

ORDERS regarding the redistribution of the military medical administrative staff in India, and including all subsidiary modifications of existing arrangements necessitated thereby, are about to be issued, applicable to the three Presidencies.

THE appointment of Resident Transport Officer at Suez, in connection with the Indian troop service, has been abolished, and an agent for the Indian troop service appointed on £450 per annum. The new arrangement will effect a saving of £1,370 per annum.

THE experiment of dispensing with grass-cutters and issuing hay to the horses of the Governor's Body-guard and batteries of Royal Artillery at St. Thomas' Mount has been tried for six months, with the result that the Local Government recommends the permanent adoption of the system, and contemplates its extension to other stations in this Presidency. The new system is more costly, but it saves horses from anthrax, of which root-grass is a fruitful cause.

THE Lahore paper says:—"We are much afraid that the system of breeding from the young mares in the rearing depôts, as adopted by the Remount Department, does not seem to be answering very well just now. The mares at the Babugharh Dépôt have commenced 'sinking' foal already, and we hear that this has assumed a more or less epidemic form, some twelve or fourteen mares having been attacked. Strangles, which has for some time been especially virulent there, has now again become malignant, owing, we suppose, to the overcrowding of the depot, and a larger percentage of deaths than is usual is taking place."

THE Bombay Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition will be opened at Poona on the 1st September next. A prize of Rs. 100 is offered to all warrant officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the British forces in the Bombay Presidency for the best essay on the following subject:—"Suggestions as to what steps are necessary to induce men of good character and respectability to enlist more freely; and how best to exclude men of bad character and prevent their re-enlistment when discharged as such." A further prize of Rs. 100 is offered to the Native Army of the Bombay Presidency, including Native officers, for the best essay in any language on the subject of "The feasibility of forming a pioneer section in each Native regiment, composed of carpenters, smiths, masons, &c." The essays are not to exceed thirty pages of foolscap in length, written on quarter-margin.

THE Lahore paper says that a curious miscarriage of military justice occurred in Burma in 1887, which is not yet finally settled. Owing to an illegal sentence passed by a court-martial, and confirmed by the superior authority acting on the advice of legal military advisers, a culprit has managed to evade justice and to obtain a good round reward in the shape of "back pay." It appears that in Burma, in 1887, a Madras Commissariat sergeant was tried by a district court-martial on charges of cheating and bribing, &c., and convicted of the same on very strong evidence. At the time of his trial this sergeant, who had been performing the duties of a warrant officer, held the temporary rank of "sub-conductor, sub. pro. tem." Of course, this did not make the man a warrant officer. The court-martial, however, viewed him as one, and sentenced him to be "dismissed from Her Majesty's service." This was an illegal sentence because the man was a non-commissioned officer, and could not be "dismissed," but should have been sentenced to be "discharged" instead. Accordingly, Government will have to pay the man as a sergeant from the time of his trial in 1887 up to the date of his discharge. We hear that the order for his discharge has now been issued; but the man will thus receive about three years' arrears of pay as a reward for cheating and bribery.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Pioneer:—"So far the ubiquitous ekka and indigenous tat seem to have escaped the vigilant eye of the Commissary-General as a cheap and efficient auxiliary for the transport service of the army in India and the level portions of the north-western frontier. The ekka is a vehicle, even in its pristine stage as handed down to us probably from the days of Chundra Gupta and earlier, of the simplest, lightest, strongest and most economical construction. The draft is reduced to a minimum, and its capacity, judging from the protruding limbs one sees, apparently expansive and unlimited. The pony also is a unique creation evolved apparently for the performance of a maximum of work on a minimum of food. He seems to thrive and flourish on a nutriment of road dust and stable refuse. Seriously, why should not the ekka be as serviceable an adjunct of the army as the once derided but now recognised and appreciated cycle in England? The latter has even been fastened with red tape to the drill-book, and will doubtless ere long be rendered terrible and complicated with a special drill. A railway waggon will hold, properly packed, an immense quantity of ekka transport ready for instant use anywhere. In Ireland during the Fenian times the practical effect of mounting infantry on cars and enabling them keep up with the cavalry in every part of the country was immense on the 'rebels.' The formation of a trial ekka service at some transport centre would probably lead to valuable results in the improvement of the vehicle and ponies, and would pave the way for the organisation of a larger service when needed from the material everywhere to hand."

THE LAND QUESTION IN INDIA.

Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held on May 19 (the Marquis of Ripon presiding), at the Westminster Town Hall, to consider some results of the Permanent Settlement in Bengal, as presented in an address by Mr. Herbert J. Reynolds, C.S.I.—Mr. Reynolds argued that a consideration of the results of the Settlement, as a whole, would lead to the conclusion that it was a wise and statesman-like measure, that politically it has been a tower of strength to the Empire, that from a social and economic point of view it has stimulated the prosperity and fostered the intelligence of the province of Bengal, and that, even from a strictly financial standpoint, the surrender of an increased land tax has been in some measure compensated by a steady development of other branches of the public revenue. The marvellous change which has transformed the aspect of the country, Mr. Reynolds urged, is unquestionably due to the feeling of security produced by the Permanent Settlement, to the conviction that the worker would be left undisturbed to reap the labour of his hands, and would not be compelled to share with the State the fruits of the prosperity he had created. The Settlement, withal, has resulted in making Bengal the most loyal Province of the Empire; it has bound up, as nothing else could do, the interest of the people with the stability of the Government; and the effect of the Settlement has been, further, to facilitate the transfer of the ownership of land to those who were likely to turn it to the best advantage, to extinguish the putwari or village accountant, and to create and foster the growth of a middle class in Bengal. Results like these, Mr. Reynolds contended, should induce those to pause who condemn Lord Cornwallis as having squandered the resources of the State by misplaced liberality to the zemindars of Bengal. The experience of a century has shown that in Bengal the Government is not a loser by limiting its demand upon the land, whilst its adoption of this policy brings with it a train of public benefits; and therefore Mr. Reynolds suggested that the principle of the Permanent Settlement should be extended to the zemindars of Orissa, and to the talookdars of the Government estates in Chittagong.

A SONG OF THE P. W. D.

[BY THE X. E. N. (C.E.)]

The Sirkar raised a little loan of fifty lakhs or so,
Then built a lovely Nahir, but that Nahir wouldn't flow.
For they'd put a Sapper on it, and he dug it straight of hill,
Then got the thanks of Government for engineering skill.
The Sirkar raised a further loan, of seventy lakhs 'tis said:
For the specialists reported they must "raise that river bed."
Meantime the river bubbles on, the zemindar sits still
And sees his harvest dying—It was engineering skill.
The Sirkar built a railway line, 'twas called the Merve-Herat.
They put a Sapper on it, for he knew what he was at.
It was a line strategic. So he gummed it with cement.
Upon the shifting desert sand—then waited the event.
It made the Portland Company. It also made a knight.
But the sky went o'er that railway, and it vanished out of sight.

It plunged a country into debt; but the scientific corps Plucked yet another laurel, and made yet another score.

RAJA MURLI MONOHUR, Bahadur, a cultured noble representing an old Hindoo family at Hyderabad, is about to embark on a novel experiment. He proposes opening a club in the city on the lines of that at Hurlingham. Outside the grounds there will be arrangements for all sorts of fashionable outdoor games, and within will be found all the comforts of a first-class club. Should the experiment succeed, the Nizam Club is doomed.

Altogether, it is a most valuable handbook to the metropolis."—GRAPHIC."Very extensive in its information and interesting in its details—as a text-book for explanation and as a historical book of reference—it will be found most useful and entertaining."—DAILY NEWS."An admirable guide, full of information. The bird's-eye views are very interesting. They often give even those who are familiar with London a new idea of the relation of localities."—ILLUSTRATED SPORTING AND DRAMATIC NEWS."In addition to an admirably-arranged and vividly-written description of all the places and sites of interest in London, interspersed with numerous historical notes and details, the guide contains a feature which is absolutely unique in a series of eighteen bird's-eye views of the principal thoroughfares and the buildings of importance which abut upon them. It is unquestionably one of the most serviceable of the works issued for the behoof of visitors to the metropolis."—SCOTSMAN.LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1889.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars; and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, and from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharmacy Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1/4d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—

J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 23rd May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 21st May; and from Calcutta to the 21st May.

It is practically settled that, owing to the light programme which is now before them, no meeting of the Legislative Council will be held in Simla before June.

A DESPATCH on Excise Administration from the Secretary of State has been published.

LORD CROSS accepts the general principle laid down for the guidance of the Local Governments and Revenue Officers.

It was resolved by the Government of India to suspend further action in the matter of levying income-tax upon profits of foreign consignors.

THE total figures for salt revenue during the year ended 1st April correspond very exactly with the estimate given of them in the Financial Statement, excluding Burma. The consumption for the year was put by Sir David Barbour (in thousands of maunds) at 31,010.

THE traffic on the Rangoon-Mandalay Railway has expanded so steadily that from Wednesday last two passenger trains were to be run daily each way.

THE Neilgherry Railway Company expects to be in a position to begin the railway shortly.

It is definitely decided that the Ameer returns immediately from Mazar Sherif to Cabul, and preparations for the journey are now being made.

THE Ameer has not yet made known his intentions with reference to the Administration of the Turkistan provinces.

THE Pathan who murdered Mr. Dalgleish on the Karakoram in 1888 has been arrested by the Russian authorities in Samarcand.

THE Birthday Honours Gazette was published at Simla on the 14th May.

ON May 15th a ghorawalla was killed in a scuffle between seven soldiers of the Worcestershire Regiment and several Natives in a billiard-room in Poona. The cause of the scuffle arose from a private assaulting a Mahomedan named Abdool Hoosein.

THE NIZAM has presented to Sir D. Fitzpatrick, K.C.S.I., the huge long gun which was one of the most remarkable and authentic relics of the presence of Mr. Raymond and his French officers in Hyderabad territory. The gun will be placed in the Residency grounds.

MAJOR PERCY GOUGH, Military Secretary to the Nizam's Government, has had a dangerous attack of bronchitis, from which he is still suffering. Major Gough is now at Wellington, where he went for a short holiday.

H.H. MAHARAJAH RAGHUNATH SINGH has succeeded to the gadi of Partabgarh, Rajpootana.

COLONEL POLE-CAREW, while on a shooting expedition in Burma, was attacked by a wounded elephant, and narrowly escaped being killed.

ON May 15th a most disastrous fire broke out at the Gordon Mill, Bombay, and resulted in the total destruction of the mill.

THE total damage is estimated at about thirteen lakhs of rupees, but this amount is fully covered by insurance.

A FIRE broke out on board the B.I.S.N. Co.'s s.s. Sirsa, which arrived in Bombay on Monday from Calcutta, while anchored off Badagerry. It is believed that all the cargo in one of the hatches is more or less damaged either by fire or water.

THE dispute in the Calcutta salt trade has been brought to a close, and a fixed rate of payment for the discharge of salt by the contractors has been accepted.

THE total number of Mahomedans in Upper India who have signed the petitions against the Congress programme now amounts to nearly forty thousand.

THE trial of the three accused said to be concerned in the attempt to murder Mr. Shamrao N. Laud, Dewan of Cambry, has concluded before the Sessions Judge of that place. Two of the accused were convicted and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. Ruttonchand, who has been in custody pending the trial for about a month, was acquitted.

CAPTAIN R. C. TEMPLE, on completion of his special duty in connection with the new Cantonment rules, returns to Burma to take charge of the forthcoming census operations in that Province. Meanwhile, as Burma will be the most difficult and important portion of next year's enumeration, and as Captain Temple will not be free of his present duties for some time to come, Mr. Baines, Census Commissioner, has betaken himself to Rangoon, where he will stay for a couple of months or so getting affairs into train.

THE death is reported of Mr. Hecquet, the engineer whose services in connection with the construction of the Sukkur Bridge were so exceptional as to win special recognition from the railway authorities.

THE death is announced of Sadashive Rao Gackwar, whose claims to the succession in Baroda were rejected in 1875. Having made an attempt to upset the new administration in that State he was arrested and sent to Benares, where he had since remained under surveillance.

THE officers appointed to the command of the three new local regiments in Burma, formed from the military police battalions, are:—10th Madras Infantry, Lieut.-Colonel C. R. Macgregor, of the 43rd Gurkha Light Infantry; 12th, Major A. Howlett, of the 17th Madras Infantry; and 33rd, Major Gaitskell, of the Guides. Majors Howlett and Gaitskell belong to the Madras Staff Corps.

It is reported from Mone that the local Siamese officers have already removed the boundary marks set up by Mr. Ney Elias, and are encroaching on what has been declared to be British territory. It may be necessary to establish a line of police outposts beyond the Salween next cold weather, as the Shans are unable to defend themselves against the intruders from the South.

A CONTEMPORARY hears from Bangkok that the King and his advisers are sorely troubled over the frontier question. Starting with a very imperfect knowledge of the frontier, they were afraid to put forward their Commission lest it should betray its ignorance and blunder into avoidable concessions. The policy of "sitting tight" was thought to be safer, and is likely to be pursued.

THE 10th Bengal Infantry from Burma, consisting of 660 men with six European and thirty-two native officers, arrived at Benares by special train from Howrah on May 18, leaving for Lucknow at six the same evening after a halt of twelve hours. The regiment appears to have suffered much from the climate of Burma, a large percentage being sick from fever, &c.

NOTES.

THE latest news from India will be found in the telegrams from the correspondents of the Times, but the news is scant, and of little importance. So much the better for India, for it means that all there is going on quietly and well. The sad thing is that the National Congress is in want of funds, and, although according to Mr. A. O. Hume and Mr. Digby there are 250 millions of downtrodden Natives calling for political representation, the call for funds to support the English office is not being responded to, and, in fact, the home agitation is in danger of collapse for want of coin. Very sad; but very like Babu's way of supporting his cause.

THE Daily News correspondent telegraphs the following rather extraordinary item of intelligence. English education in Bombay would appear to run a little riot:—"Mr. Jinsiwala, M.A., Sanskrit Professor at the Wilson College, Bombay, has created some sensation by lecturing to Native students against female education and social reforms. The lecturer inveighed against English social life, and related his manner of enforcing domestic discipline by slapping his wife's face. The Native papers protest that these opinions are not generally held by educated Natives. People at Bombay are asking if this gentleman is a proper teacher for a missionary college." If this be true, others besides "people at Bombay" might ask the same question.

"OUR own correspondents" are not satisfied with the state of affairs at Simla, although it has been officially announced that the Legislative Council has no work to do, and ought therefore to see to the enjoyment of the community, official and non-official, whose interests it is supposed to guard. No work, and no play means a sad summer at Simla, and one can sympathise with the correspondent who, writing from that altitude a day or two before the present Overland Mail, says:—"Simla has been by no means lively during the last few weeks, and the usual 'swing' of gaiety is apparently as far off as ever. There is no doubt that the season is to be a late one." But he draws this consolation:—"We shall perhaps be none the worse for a slight pause before we commenced the usual programme of dances and dinners, flower shows, fairs, and frivolities."

THERE is certainly "muscular Christianity," as the Mandalay paper puts it, in Burma. Ministers are either whipping women, or assaulting men, or otherwise doing violence around them. There is a Mr. Nodder who has acted objectionably; then Mr. Stockings; and now there is a Mr. Sutherland. Mr. Sutherland has beaten one Mr. King, whose offence consisted in having employed a woman, a Burmese convert, who wanted employment. It is not known why Mr. Sutherland was displeased in this matter, but he trespassed, insulted and assaulted; for which he has been fined fifty rupees. And now the public wish to say what they think about this kind of thing. There is, of course, the effect it must have upon the heathen, and the disrepute into which it is likely to bring Christianity; for still do the heathen look to example rather than to precept, judging of the value of teachings by the conduct of the teachers. It is evident that some of our missionaries have mistaken their vocation, the army being their proper sphere; but when the missionary societies have truculent members, is it not known that there are savage places where they could be sent to fight against the constant efforts of the Natives to eat them?

HERE is another complaint from another "our own correspondent" from the same place:—"No Sipi Fair, no races, a postponed flower show; that is about the sum and substance of Simla doings at present. Add to it a murky atmosphere which is grimly suggestive of dust-storms on a grand scale below, and the very fair rehearsals of a dust-storm that greet one at every corner of the Mall, and you possess a comprehensive idea of how much we have to make us happy. So fair and foul a scene I have not known as this before my windows when the obscuring haze—a haze that is neither smoke, nor dust, nor good Himalayan mist—rolls up morning after morning, and blots out from view the sun and cheerful skies and the beauties of the surrounding hills. One is well aware that there are stations in the plains where the aspect of Nature in Merrie May is neither lovely nor enlivening. I do not need to be reminded that there are æsthetic souls who repine against the Destiny that has cast their lot in such places. But what, after all, is their cause of complaint to ours who, pitched in the midst of beauties looked upon as our own, are robbed of their enjoyment by disagreeable conditions that should belong exclusively to others? I say we are entitled to better treatment."

A STORY with a moral reaches the Civil and Military Gazette from Simla. The other day a junior aide-de-camp on the Viceregal staff was asked by a lady at a picnic whether they would soon get to "Kissing Point?" The aide-de-camp is young and guileless—what A.D.C. is not?—and the position was too much for him; so, with one reproachful glance, he blushed, stammered, and at last fled! The moral, of course, is that an aide-de-camp must possess some knowledge of Simla topography as well as of the art of love.

A DESPATCH from the Secretary of State is published in the Gazette of India re the Excise administration. It states that the despatch of the Government of India places a different complexion on the matters mentioned during the debate in the House of Commons. Lord Cross accepts the general principle laid down for the guidance of the Local Governments and Revenue officers, and is confident that the Government of India and the Local Governments are fully desirous, as is the House of Commons, to prevent an increase of intemperance. The recent discussion will have strengthened the position of Government and its officers in their efforts to restrict the use of liquors and drugs.

ALTHOUGH legislation on the leprosy question is at a standstill pending the medical decision as to the contagious nature of the disease, all possible precautions, says the Englishman, are meanwhile to be taken by the Local Governments. The Government of India has advised the Local Governments to exert their power to secure the segregation of the sexes, and to encourage lepers to reside in such hospitals or asylums as already exist. As matters stand it would be impossible for Government to provide accommodation for all the lepers in India; and even before any large measure of the kind could be contemplated it would be necessary to see what assistance is forthcoming as the result of the agitation in England. In dealing with the question of compulsory incarceration the utmost care would have to be exercised, but it may be possible at present to ascertain what the general opinion on the subject is throughout the country.

THERE is no foundation, says a Bombay paper, for stating that Sir Lepel Griffin has obtained a concession for constructing a railway to Cashmere. The question of making a railway is still being actively discussed, but it is extremely improbable that the Government of India will guarantee any line to Cashmere until there are better prospects of its becoming a paying concern.

ONE could hardly go to a hotter place—even for one's sins—than to the place mentioned in the following extract from an official meteorological report:—"Jacobabad in Sind was by several degrees the hottest place in India on the 11th May with a maximum of 115° in the shade. Masulipatam in Madras was second with 112° on the 11th, and had the highest record of 113° on the following day. Many places in the Punjab and North-West register 111° or 112°."

THE employees of the Times of India newspaper presented Mr. C. E. Kane, the managing proprietor, with an address in the compound of the School of Art, on his approaching departure to England for the first time since he has become one of the proprietors of the paper.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 8.

The agitation against the income-tax is gaining strength daily. The Calcutta Trades Association has addressed a memorial to the Government, which, after severely criticising the proposal to tax the profits on consignments from abroad, proceeds to urge that the time has come for the entire abolition of the tax. The memorial says that the tax is wholly unsuited to India, and the inquisitorial system of working it is becoming a serious evil, creating constant irritation and a growing feeling of repugnance. It is understood that the European Defence Association and the Native Chamber of Commerce are preparing similar memorials. If the Government reply be not favourable, it is probable that a public meeting will follow, and that the agitation will spread throughout the country.

The Native Congress movement in favour of elective institutions is apparently in danger of collapsing for want of funds. The secretary of the Madras committee has issued an urgent appeal for subscriptions. He states that nothing has yet been paid of the contribution of Rs. 6,400 promised by Madras. He adds that not a day passes without his receiving telegrams and letters requesting him to send money to meet the heavy expenses of the deputation now working in England, and stating that the work must stop if money be not sent.

The report on the working of the municipalities in the Punjab for the last year is hardly encouraging for the admirers of local self-government. Since 1844 44 municipal committees have been abolished as taking no interest in their duties. The number remaining at the close of last year was 158, of which five were threatened with extinction for the same reason. Sixty-three municipalities have an annual income of under Rs. 5,000, and 48 have a population of under 5,000. The official reviewer admits that many among the smaller municipalities showed want of energy and public spirit, and even in some of the larger towns the committees met seldom. The elections apparently excited little interest, and occasionally a person of humble social position was returned, a fact which induced the Government to institute inquiry regarding the desirability of fixing a property qualification.

The Meteorological Department has published its annual forecast of the monsoon, based on the Himalayan snowfall and other indications. It states that the prospects are very favourable for Burma, Assam, and Bengal, somewhat less favourable for Behar and the North-West Provinces, and distinctly unfavourable for the Punjab, Rajputana, Northern Bombay, the Deccan, and Berar. An average rainfall is expected in the Central Provinces and on the Bombay coast. The monsoon has apparently begun in Bombay, but it is doubtful whether the current has yet reached Bengal, notwithstanding the heavy rainfall of the past week.

The Government has published a despatch to the local administrations regarding police administration. It suggests more stringent regulations for the control of habitual offenders, and circulates a Bill on the subject of surveillance proposed by the Punjab Government. It states that in Bengal 70 per cent. of the serious crimes committed go unpunished. This fact is attributed to want of cohesion between the regular and the rural police. The Government is disposed to think that the pay of constables and inspectors should be increased, and that more cohesion should be established between the police of the different provinces and that of British India and the Native States.

Another strange railway accident occurred near Sholapore on Wednesday night. A gale of extraordinary violence blew down a large iron water tank standing on cast-iron pillars beside the line and threw it across the rails. The night was very dark, and the driver of the Bombay and Madras mail train, not seeing the obstruction, ran into it. Fortunately the casualties were few, and none were fatal.

The final wheat report of the Bombay Presidency states that the area shown is 4 per cent. below last year and 2 per cent. below the average, but the outturn promises to show an increase of nearly 18 per cent., owing to the better condition of the crop. The Punjab report says that the season of 1889-90 is unfavourable owing to the deficient rainfall. The area harvested is 10 per cent. and the gross outturn 21 per cent. under last year. The irrigated lands alone have yielded a fair average crop. In the North-West Provinces there is a large decrease in the area under wheat, but in most of the districts the crop is good, and it is believed that the outturn will exceed last year's by nearly 18,000 tons.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 7.

The force of military police which was sent to break up a band of decoits who had assembled in the territory of Wuntho Tsawbwa has failed to bring them to bay. Ngahamat's band has retreated to the Kachyen Hills. The rains prevent further active operations.

Brigadier Wolseley, C.B., has assumed command of the Burma division.

The King of Siam has recently visited Penang, where he appears to have made himself very popular.

Owing to the rapid progress made with the survey of Upper Burma, a change will soon be made in the system by which the taxes are levied on State lands. The Burmans dislike the present system of annual appraisalment of their crops, which is also burdensome to the revenue officer. A fixed demand will be substituted for annual appraisalment. This, while acceptable to the people, will involve no loss to the Government.

Six months have elapsed since Mr. A. P. MacDonnell, when officiating as Chief Commissioner, recommended the appointment of a Judicial Commissioner for Upper Burma. The urgent need for such an appointment is shown by some recent proceedings in the Kyauksai district. From reports published in the local journals, it would seem that the police used most oppressive measures to obtain evidence against certain accused persons. The magistrate, at the request of the district superintendent of police, refused to grant bail to the accused, although the offences were bailable. One of the accused was confined in a solitary cell, and was handcuffed day and night for three days and two nights, till he made a confession implicating himself and another. On obtaining his liberty he immediately withdrew the confession, stating that it had been extorted from him. It is also alleged that other witnesses were kept three weeks in gaol without inquiry, until they gave testimony implicating the accused. The prisoners were ultimately released, there being no evidence to support the charges on which they had been kept nearly a month in custody. The Officiating Commissioner of the division, an uncovenanted officer acting as the High Court, declared, on application being made to him to transfer the case to another district where the witnesses would be free from police terrorism, that his duty was to look after the interests of the Government, and to prevent the difficulties of prosecution being increased.

The Rangoon Times, a journal which strongly supports the local Government, comments in severe terms on these revelations, as also does the Mandalay Herald.

GOVERNMENT BILLS ON INDIA.—The Indian Council announced on Saturday the following special sales:—In bills, on Madras, Rs. 3,00,000 at 1s. 6½d., Rs. 3,00,000 at 1s. 6 5-16d., and Rs. 1,00,000 at 1s. 6 7-16d. In telegraphic transfers, on Bombay Rs. 2,00,000 at 1s. 6 15-32d., Rs. 3,00,000 at 1s. 6 10-32d., and Rs. 1,00,000 at 1s. 6 23-32d.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—Mysore and Nundydroog Shares on Saturday rose 1-16, while Gold Fields of Mysore declined 6d. Mysore Shares were last quoted 5 5-16 to 5 7-16, Nundydroog 2 1-16 to 2 3-16, Indian Consolidated 1s. to 1s. 6d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 9s. to 9s. 6d., Ooregum Ordinary 2 1-16 to 2s., ditto Preference 1½ to 1½, Devala-Moyar 1s. 6d. to 2s., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 8s. 6d. to 9s., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. 3d. to 1s. 9d., South-East Mysore 1s. to 1s. 3d., Indian Glenrock 6d. to 1s., Gold Fields of Mysore 9s. to 10s., New South-East Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

A SECTION of the Hazaras, known as the Sheikh Atis, recently organised a revolt against the Ameer; but before they could take action, says the Civil and Military Gazette, some of their leaders were arrested by the Ameer's officials, and sent to Turkestan to be dealt with by the Ameer. The revolt was thus nipped in the bud, but it appears that the Jaghori tribe of Hazaras have also refused to submit to the orders of the Ameer's officials. The Ameer's son has sent orders to Sirdar Muhammad Hassan Khan, Governor of Ghazni, to inquire into the matter. If any trouble is apprehended arrangements will be made for sending more troops into their country.

WHILE the timber trade of Rangoon continues to flourish and increase, the neighbouring town of Moulmein appears, says the Englishman, to be losing ground. One of the chief causes of the falling off is said to be the denuding of the forests near the Salween, logs having now to be brought to the river's bank from a considerable distance. In addition to this, the Irrawaddy is a much more favourable river for floating timber than the Salween, and losses from salvaged and damaged timber are not great. The last straw that threatens to bear down the Moulmein merchants is that the Government is levying an import duty on their timber, but as the bulk of the timber comes from Siam and Independent Karennee, the Government considers itself fully entitled to do this.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

BRIGADE-SURGEONS' PAY.

(Civil and Military Gazette).

The question has been raised as to the non-recognition in this country, from a pecuniary point of view, of the rank of brigade-surgeon on the Medical Staff. It appears that brigade-surgeons draw the same pay as surgeon-majors, because no pecuniary advantage is given to the higher rank. For instance, a brigade-surgeon, after 25 years' service, draws Rs. 1,092 a month, and so does a surgeon-major after the same amount of service. In England, however, the brigade-surgeon would draw £1 10s. per diem, and the surgeon-major £1 7s. 6d. It seems but right, therefore, that brigade-surgeons in India should be treated in the same way. The question has arisen now over a point which, perhaps, illustrates rather forcibly the anomaly of the position. A brigade-surgeon of the Medical Staff serving in India was recently promoted to the rank of deputy surgeon-general and ordered home on promotion. The regulations say that British officers ordered home on promotion are to receive, from the date of their promotion to the date of their embarkation, the Indian pay and allowances they were entitled to before their promotion, plus the difference between the English pay of their old and new rank. The English pay of a deputy surgeon-general is £2 per diem, so the officer alluded to was given by the Pay Department the difference between £2 and the English pay (£1 10s.) of a brigade-surgeon, viz., 10s. This he objected to on the grounds that he was never paid as a brigade-surgeon of India, and that, financially, his old rank was really that of surgeon-major. He, accordingly, claimed the difference between £2 and the English pay (£1 7s. 6d.) of a surgeon-major, viz.:—12s. 6d. Out of this contested point has arisen the whole question, of the non-recognition, with regard to pay, of brigade-surgeons of the Medical Staff serving in India. At present it is an anomaly which the Government in this country would do well to remove, especially as it is proposed to give brigade-surgeons increased responsibilities under the new distribution of the administrative Medical Staff in India.

THE KASHMIR RAILWAY SCHEME.

(Madras Times.)

In many quarters an idea is current that the Kashmir Railway scheme is likely to be "hung up" for an indefinite period. It is much to be regretted if the Government has not already determined to push ahead with all reasonable speed. Military experts have stated without any appearance of hesitancy that the approach to India, via Kashmir, is one that has been closely studied by Russia. There has been a demand among Russian agents for the latest full maps, and for official intelligence concerning the little known regions along each side of the borders of Kashmir. French explorers and geographers have been to the front with a zeal that is certainly praiseworthy, whether it has or has not any similarity in origin with the scientific expedition now forming, nominally French, but associated with Russians, to explore Central Asia to the Indian frontiers. Russia finds agents when and where she will. French scientists are men that can be led by others who know their weaknesses and prejudices, and under the guise of science, Russia has already done much, and can do more. India has no sympathy with Russian scientists in Asiatic regions. She is apt to term them spies. But Frenchmen are cordially welcomed and assisted; they reach home safely and well charged with information, which the Russ is quick to acquire and to utilise. In the simple fact of an open co-operation of French and Russian scientists lies a hint that the Government of India would be wise to take and to act upon with promptitude. India has time before her ere these scientists reach her frontiers, and it would be well if the Kashmir Railway scheme, the backbone of local defence, be so pushed forward that the Russian scientists may be unable to report anything that will encourage Russian hopes of making a successful attack upon India along the frontier adjoining Kashmir. Years have been wasted already, until now every month is important; and although routes have been marked out at last, this is no advantage whatever, unless promptly followed up by other operations.

General de Bourbel, Chief Engineer to the Kashmir State, has issued a report on the routes, which are four in number. Only two of them are really worth consideration. One would go via Abbottabad to join the North-West Railway at Hasan Abdal; the other would be a direct route, following with some accuracy the alignment of the fine new cart-road to Kohala, and taking in the Poonch traffic, en route from Kahuta to Rawul Pindies. The military authorities would prefer the first of these routes; but, if other considerations make the second preferable, it is probable that Sir Frederick Roberts would give his adhesion thereto rather than see the long-desired connection of the Kashmir Valley with the Indian Railway system any longer delayed. At any rate, the choice between the two should not be a matter of any very great difficulty, and the results, from both military and political standpoints, would probably be such as would reflect constant praise on Lord Lansdowne, were he to push the matter on to a speedy settlement. We have heard so much about Kashmir of late, and so little of good, that it is easy to believe it would be well to have the State brought into closer connection with India not by way of annexation, but by means of railway communication. This would at least enable the Government to have earlier information than now regarding the course of events in Kashmir, and, in all probability, the information received would be more correct. Relations with Kashmir would tend to become more friendly, and England would be able, if threatened, to throw forward a strong force to defend what is at present a vulnerable point in her frontier line. It is believed, also, that the financial or commercial outlook of the railway is encouraging. London financiers, it is said, might easily be convinced that it would pay. Indeed, it is asserted that these financiers have already expressed their readiness to take the matter up, and the Rothschilds are stated to have appreciated the enterprise, and to have offered to support it. If the military and political advantages to be derived be granted—and it would be difficult to dispute them—and if the commercial aspect is as favourable as we have been led to believe, there is absolutely no justification for further delay on the part of the Government. The Kashmir Railway scheme is one that ought to be pushed forward with energy, so that "check" may once again be called to Russia, without fear of her being able to give a new colour to a tedious game.

CAUSES OF INFANT MARRIAGES AND THEIR CONCOMITANT EVILS.

(Madras Times.)

The baneful practice of marrying infants when they are at their mother's breasts is looked upon by the Hindus as a Shastraic injunction. The Brahmans, Vaisyas, and some other sections of the Hindus celebrate infant-marriages, for fear of becoming outcasts should the girls attain their puberty before marriage; the Sudras and other lower castes imitate them to a more or less extent. When a careful and minute examination is made, to ascertain whether the Shastras countenance such baneful customs, it can be said, without fear of contradiction, that the inhuman practice of infant-marriages is opposed to the spirit of the Shastras, and that it is only a custom of modern growth. In bygone days, girls were married only when they were old enough to understand the world, and the ceremonies that are performed on the marriage occasion; but nowadays, when enlightenment and civilisation are making rapid strides, infants are mated to dotards. It is impossible to mention, in the limited space given by journalistic courtesy, the several causes which are at the bottom of these infant-marriages; but I shall give some of the more important ones, which show my readers that the practice of infant-marriages is not a Shastraic injunction, but the outcome of the peoples' mania to see the girls mated early. The difficulty of getting a husband in the same caste prompts the parents of a girl to celebrate her marriage, no matter what her age is, whenever a husband for her is available. The desire of the parents is to see their daughters married when they themselves are alive, so that they may witness the tamasha of such marriages. When an old dotard, who is rolling in riches, offers a certain sum of money to the parents of a girl, for giving her in marriage to him, the parents at once give their consent, for fear of losing such a golden opportunity. The ignorant and superstitious people, taking a pride in infant marriages, celebrate them with great éclat. These are some of the chief motives which move the Hindus to perform infant-marriages to a very large extent. Such inhuman and ironical practices as infant-marriages based upon individual interests have been introduced into the sociology of the Hindus by the priests and ignorant classes, under the guise of Shastraic injunctions, and as customs of the land. The dread of caste, the love of display, the greed for money, and the family pride, in celebrating infant-marriages, are amongst the causes at work. No sooner is a female infant born than the parents think of its disposal in marriage; in a Hindu home marriage is an all-absorbing topic. In fact, the Hindus look upon marriage, as the be-all and end-all of a man's life. The Judge-made laws, and other spurious translations of the original texts, no doubt uphold these barbarous practices; but the real Vedic authorities are quite against these infant-marriages. In those quarters where ignorance reigns supreme, and custom rules as a tyrant, the people are under the clutches of their priests, who, to meet their (the priests') own ends and purposes, give every support to these pernicious practices. So much about the causes of these infant-marriages. The evils that arise out of such marriages are manifold; the parents of the girl celebrate her marriage at a time when she hardly knows what the world is, and what is being performed. Should the infant bride's husband die she is doomed to perpetual widowhood, and as such she is treated in the most disgraceful manner. Even if the husband survives, this union, in course of time, turns out to be an union of hands and not of hearts, as in the famous case of Rukhmabai. The girl being doomed to perpetual widowhood, for no fault of hers, is compelled to bear the brunt of her lot quietly; she is not the only being on whom this calamity falls; her parents, at times the whole family, share the same fate. The daily sight of this tender widow, and her awkward position, moves them a great deal, and gradually undermines their health, so much so that unnatural deaths occur at last. These infant-marriages, besides bringing such untold miseries upon the people, impede the social advancement of the Hindus. Humanity and common sense revolt at the very idea of an infant-marriage.

C. P. SHEEHURRY NAIDU.

AN INDIAN HALL-MARK.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We hope that Mr. Goschen will carry his proposal to introduce a hall-mark for Indian silver-ware, showing that the silver of which it is made is of rupee fineness—a fineness, we may add, less than that of the silver used in the coinage at home; and that British jealousy of Indian silver work will not be allowed to prevent it being carried into effect. The British silversmith naturally does not wish to see the English market flooded by Indian manufacture, but we in India cannot take that view. In this country we are bound to wish well to anything that promises to save Indian art work from the deterioration which has so long threatened it. If the new hall-mark is imposed, it will tend in the desired direction, for the Indian worker, whether in Cutch or Jaipur or elsewhere, will soon learn to use material of the proper fineness. Hitherto the Englishman homeward bound has not cared to take silver-work upon which at the port of arrival he has to pay 18d. an ounce duty. Very soon, as was promised by Mr. Goschen when laying his Budget before Parliament, the Anglo-Indian will not have to pay the duty; and he will, moreover, have the satisfaction of knowing that his silver ware is of a genuine kind. There are no doubt practical difficulties in the way of introducing the hall-mark. It will be difficult to have it done in India, for to do so would probably mean an assay establishment in every place where silver work is made. If the hall-marking is to be done at home, the taking off of the duty will do little to encourage Anglo-Indians to bring Indian silver ware from this country with them unless they bring it in the rough; for in order to be hall-marked, the ware must be in the rough previous to being tested and stamped. If the Government of India could see its way to take measures whereby Indian silver could be hall-marked as of rupee fineness before being sold to the retail purchaser in India, the difficulty would perhaps be solved. Most Indian silversmiths of respectability will, we believe, have no objection to the hall-mark, and, if that is so, the English merchants whom Reuter tells us are objecting to Mr. Goschen's proposal will not be likely to receive the sympathy from India that they appear to expect.

OFFICERING THE INDIAN ARMY.

(Pioneer.)

Though several authorities were even then for substituting a system of direct appointment, the opinions of the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Napier, and of Sir Henry Norman, the Military Member, were against a change. The fact is that the majority of those then at the head of affairs were men whose early experience of the Native Army had been gained in pre-Mutiny days, and who, contrasting the class of officers obtained then under a system of interest hardly qualified, except in the case of Engineers and Artillery, by a nominal examination, with those coming to the staff Corps through British regiments, could scarcely be expected to see any defect in a system which had procured so great an improvement. But the drawbacks of the plan have grown increasingly apparent with advancing years. Among the most conspicuous is the invidious comparison which it tends to establish among British regiments. Prima facie a good regiment is one which its officers do not desire to quit for any other service; and it is notorious that there are regiments in which a candidate for the Staff Corps is an unwelcome rarity, while there are others in which half the subalterns are looking forward to changing their condition. The causes of this state of things lie altogether apart from professional capacity, but the distinctions it creates are none the less real and undesirable. The consequence is, that a young officer leaving Sandhurst either exerts himself to get appointed to a battalion in which transfers to the Staff Corps are known to be customary, or if he is unlucky enough to be gazetted to one of the other kind finds himself obliged to begin his career by a step in defiance of regimental tradition. Probably he will conceal his intention from his Colonel and brother-officers until the last moment: at all events, he will feel considerable reluctance in announcing it. And it does not seem conducive to the dignity of Indian service that entrance to it should be looked upon in any way as a step downwards, or that the possession of more or fewer candidates for its ranks should be a criterion of the standing of a British regiment. With the system of direct appointments from Sandhurst not only will this reproach be removed, but the Indian vacancies at the same time will, we may be sure, become the objects of keen competition. The attachment of the young Indian officer to a British corps for the first year after his arrival in the country will give him all the advantages of that best of military schools as he obtains it now, and under better auspices. Most Commandants and Adjutants are naturally averse to troubling themselves about the training of a youngster who is only making a convenience of the regiment; but when in the future he comes to them as a probationer confessed they will feel the existence of a definite obligation towards him, without any of the misunderstandings which beset the relation at present.

THE PURCHASE OF SILVER PLATE.

(Englishman.)

Much more important to us in India than any effect which the abolition of the duties can possibly have on the Native industry is the extent to which the reform will stimulate the purchase of silver plate at home. The abolition of the duty in England is almost certain to give a powerful impetus in this direction, and when it is considered to what an extent electro-plate has come into common use with the people in recent years, it must, we think, be admitted that the desire for silver dishes almost amounts to a national trait. With the price of silver reduced by eighteenpence an ounce, the taste for bullion may be expected to displace that for imitation or veneer, and if a fashion sets in for silver articles the consumption of the metal may increase to such an extent as to affect exchange. According to a careful estimate, the present consumption of silver in the arts amounts to no less than three-fourths of the entire annual production of from fifty to sixty million ounces. Lowe in 1822 estimated it at two-thirds. If the effect of the present cheapening is to bring silverware and jewellery into favour with the classes and masses of England, the art consumption will certainly far exceed anything that has yet been known. The mere prospect of such an increase is not lost, we may be sure, upon those at home who follow the silver question, although in India an idea seems almost to prevail that the abolition of the duty is confined to the silver wares of this country. It appears to be necessary to repeat that the duty on all gold and silver plate in England, home-made as well as imported, has been abolished.

THE MADRAS ARMY—ITS IMPROVEMENT OR EFFACEMENT.

(Madras Mail.)

The policy of neglect, discouragement, and distrust which the Government of India has of late years adopted towards that portion of Her Majesty's military forces which is recruited in the Madras Presidency, has received its latest illustration in the disbandment of three more regiments of Madras Infantry, and in the substitution in their place of an equal number of battalions of military police composed principally of Punjabis, and enrolled for local service in Burma—a drastic proceeding which, it is rumoured at Simla, will shortly be followed by the disbandment of seven other corps! It is true that the military policemen thus brought on the strength of the regular army are to be placed under the control of the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, to be officered from the establishment of this Presidency, and to assume the numbers and honourable distinctions of the corps they are about to replace. But it is too early yet to judge how far the first and second measures will be carried out; and seeing that at the present moment several Bengal and Bombay Officers are serving with these battalions, and bearing former experiences in mind, scepticism is permissible as to the extent to which Madras officers will be utilised. As to the third position, it is doubtful whether it may not be considered as merely adding insult to injury; and it is certain that it has been used as a cloak for the misappropriation of the colours and funds of the disbanded corps. The Punjabi policemen now brought on the strength of the Madras Army have no conceivable right to the battle names recalling the glorious traditions of the 10th, 12th, and 33rd Madras Infantry; and the question of mulcting the officers of the latter of the regimental funds and mess plate, which they have maintained, has most properly been referred, and will, it may be trusted, be fought out. It is also true that financial considerations are urged in extenuation of the latest blunder in military policy of the Supreme Government; but that blunder has caused a feeling little short of dismay throughout a large and devoted portion of Her Majesty's army and it suggests that in the interest of the Empire, the question had best at once be settled whether the Madras army is to be effaced altogether, or maintained as an efficient unit of the national forces. A system of killing that army by attrition is clearly not only misplaced, but expensive. A definite policy of some kind, therefore, is an absolute necessity; and duty demands that the Government of India should be pressed to evolve one. We therefore propose to review in a series of papers the history of the Madras army; the causes that have contributed to that Army's decline in efficiency; the means that exist for the restoration of such efficiency; the capriciousness and want of generosity and foresight of the Government; and the vital importance of rendering Southern India capable of defending itself against internal and external foes.

LITERATURE IN BOMBAY.

(Times of India.)

Literature in Bombay would seem to be looking up of late, for no fewer than one hundred pages of the last Government Gazette are occupied by a list of the books printed in the Presidency during the last three months of 1889. As usual, Mr. Sathe's catalogue is analytical and descriptive as well as official and statistical, and if this section of the work is all from the Registrar's own pen we confess that we do not envy him. To wade through a mass of literature that takes a hundred pages to catalogue, and describe every other work in it, can be no cheerful task, even for a man of Mr. Sathe's energy and resource; while to analyse plots, pronounce upon morals and discuss ethics, in the narrow limits of a marginal column headed "Remarks" is a task from which the hardest critic of modern literature might well shrink appalled. We have them all here, however, and very good reading they are. Passing over for a moment the English publications, we find that in Marathi works the last quarter of the year was singularly prolific. Popular verse books and translations, educational volumes, devotional songs, essays on the duty of man and the duty of women, astrological and scientific works, and some Sanskrit and other dramas in a prose dress make up the sum of the Marathi section. It is on the Guzerati section, however, that the character of the people and their moral and ethical tastes are most clearly revealed. Nearly a third of the whole space of the catalogue is taken up by Guzerati works alone, and a strikingly large number of these are devoted to love more or less illicit, and its consequences more or less disastrous. There is, of course, a plentiful admixture of moral and religious reflection, and of the semi-philosophic sentiment which obtain so largely in Guzerati literature; but the main impression left upon the mind after reading Mr. Sathe's analyses is distinctly that which we have indicated. Of Hindu books very few were published during the year. Four books on military tactics were issued, three being translations from English handbooks and one original; and there is a translation of Mr. Biddulph's "Guide to the Criminal Procedure Code." In Kanarese there was a translation of the well-known "Shakuntala," a pamphlet advocating widow-remarriage, a number of educational works, some collections of popular love ballads and folk songs, and a drama, Sundara Natak. In Urdu we have a dramatised version of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, a musical drama, several tragedies, lamentations, mournful songs, and some Mahomedan mysticism; while in Sanskrit and Persian a number of religious volumes saw the light, none of which call for especial notice. On the whole the quarter seems to have been a very busy one, especially with regard to that description of literature to which Mr. Sathe devoted, in his last annual report, some deservedly stern criticism. Criticism, however, is not likely to have much effect if this class of literature really reflects, as it seems to do, the life and thought of the people among whom it is read; and in vernacular literature, as we have more than once had occasion to point out, high morals are distinctly not popular.

LABOUR REGULATIONS.

(Pioneer.)

We cannot say we are greatly surprised at the news that the India Office intend pressing on the Government of India the recommendations of the Berlin Labour Conference. Of course everyone in this country knows how ridiculous it is to suppose that labour regulations, which may be desirable or necessary in Europe, must of necessity be suited to India. The Berlin Conference itself virtually admitted that the conditions of labour, and pari passu, the legislation required for the protection of the labourer must vary in different climates and with different races, when it made a distinction between children in northern and children in southern countries; but when Lancashire presses, reason, common sense, and justice alike are apt to go to the wall in England. It was so in the case of the cotton duties, and it is probable that it will be so in every case where the selfish interest of the Lancashire manufacturers are involved. All that the Government of India can now do, we are afraid, is to endeavour that the inevitable compromise shall be as little as possible hurtful to the true interests of the millowner and millhand in this country; and from this point of view it is perhaps, a misfortune that Mr. Scoble's Bill did not pass before the legislative session at Calcutta ended. As we have frequently taken occasion to point out, those best qualified to give an opinion on the subject are convinced that some of the provisions of the measure, even as it at present stands, go too far, and that as far at least as Northern India is concerned, it will do more harm than good; but with the pressure which is sure to be applied from home within the next six months, it is quite on the cards that the last state may be worse than the first. It is to be hoped, however, that the Local Governments, whose opinions are at present being awaited by the Government of India, and the Government of India themselves, will make a determined stand. It is only necessary to refer to one of the recommendations of the Berlin Conference to show how absurd is the assumption that they are applicable in India. The Conference not only recommends that no children under twelve in northern, and under ten in southern countries should be allowed to engage in industrial occupations, but it proposes that even within this limit an educational test should be required. It is obvious that in a country like India, where education has reached only an infinitesimal fraction of the population, where the great mass of the people are very poor, and where the earnings of the children, help in a considerable degree to keep a family from sinking beneath the bare limit of subsistence, the application of such a test would be intolerably unjust, if it were not wholly impracticable.

THREATENED ABOLITION OF HIGH SCHOOLS.

(Indian Spectator.)

It is currently reported that the Director of Public Instruction has orders to abolish all high schools that are not self-supporting or cannot pay at least two-thirds of their expenditure out of their fees. The Government high school at Ahmadnagar has been taken over by a new association, under pressure from the Director. The Dhulia high school will also shortly cease to exist as a Government institution, and the Director proposes to abolish the high school at Hyderabad, Sind, also if no local body can be found to accept its transfer. We must confess these proceedings have taken us by surprise. We were under the impression that at least the principles laid down by the Education Commission will be followed by Government; but it appears we were mistaken. Nothing can well be more opposed to the recommendation of that Commission than this wholesale transfer of high schools in places where the people are hardly ripe for the management of such institutions. The rule upon which the Director appears to be acting is that any school which fails to raise 66 2-3 per cent. of its expenditure from fees is a fit subject for transfer. It is true the Education Commission added that other considerations, besides the measure of self-support attained by a particular school, should be attended to; but these other considerations may be gathered from the general conclusion arrived at by them after weighing the pros and cons of the question. It appears, however, that the Government has obtained such guarantees in backward towns, and not in advanced cities like Bombay and Poona. We remember a proposal was made at Poona some years ago to take over the Deccan College; but the proposal was eventually negatived. But if a city like Poona is not yet prepared for managing the Government College or the Government High School, how can Ahmadnagar, or Dhulia, or Hyderabad, Sind, be said to be prepared for it? The recommendations of the Education Commission in the opinion of several publicists went too far; but the present policy of Government casts even those recommendations to the wind and mercilessly swoops upon all expensive high schools with a view apparently to reduce educational expenditure. The Director has not yet ventured to abolish any high school altogether, but he has taken indirect steps to secure this end. These indirect steps are to raise the fees to a prohibitive scale to do away with the lower standards, so as to cut off the necessary supply for the higher, and to impose stringent restrictions on admission. By these means even a flourishing school can be made to appear a failure and a burden, and we will not be surprised if this policy vigorously pursued ends in reducing the number of efficient feeders to our few colleges, and retarding high education.

RAILWAYS IN AFGHANISTAN.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Khojak Tunnel being now bored through, and the masonry in rapid progress, it is interesting to hear, on the authority of Mr. Demetrius Boulger, that the great question exercising the Amir Abdul Rahman's mind is that of railways. It is even said that in order to arrive at a decision as to whether railways shall be introduced into Afghanistan by himself or by his successors, he will visit Kandahar in the spring, and perhaps take a further look at our railway, which now riches Chaman on the Afghan side of the Khojak. The railway material, which was formerly accumulated at Kila Abdulla on the higher side of the pass, has been transported to Chaman, twelve miles beyond, so that the work of laying down a line all the way to the vicinity of Kandahar could be undertaken at short notice and carried out in a few weeks. Near Kandahar the ground, which from Chaman is easy and level, becomes broken and difficult, but for all practical purposes a railway to Kandahar may be regarded as an affair of two months. Once the Amir sees fit to make up his mind and give his consent Afghanistan will have ready access to the markets of Northern India. The military situation would not be appreciably changed by the actual construction of the railway; in the event of a war the line would be laid down as a first step, and with or without a railway Kandahar must always be dominated by the Power which occupies Quetta in force. The prolongation of the railway to Candahar is only a question of time. When the old and not altogether unnatural dread of ulterior designs on the part of the Government of India has given way under the mellowing influence of a largesse of twenty five lakhs paid annually during a long period, and the abstention from any intermeddling in their domestic affairs, the Afghans will take as kindly to railways as the people of India have done, and the slow and costly camel will be superseded by the iron horse, to the great advantage of Afghan as well as of Indian trade. To bring about this desirable consummation, however, one thing would be necessary. The fiscal conditions against which trade through Afghanistan has to contend are worse than the physical, and a railway to Kandahar would be of little advantage to anybody if the obstructive policy of the Ameer's local representatives were to continue. Every one who has written on our transfrontier trade, officials and non-officials alike, has lamented the pernicious effect of the local restrictions on trade in Afghanistan. Could not the next remittance of Indian rupees to the Ameer be accompanied by a polite reminder that every Native State in India had lately seen the advantage of breaking down the barriers against trade which it had maintained in the form of vexatious and obstructive transit dues. We need not be quite so timid upon a matter of common interest when dealing with a friendly potentate to whom we pay a guarantee of a quarter of a crore every year.

OFFICERING THE STAFF CORPS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

To sum up briefly, the proposed new system is a bad one for India. The Staff Corps will lose much, and gain nothing whatever. The present system of offcoring the Staff Corps from British regiments would do much less harm to the British service if officers were replaced by Horse Guards as soon as they joined a Native Regiment. Commanding officers of British corps would not then have much to complain about. The Staff Corps, too, is now thrown open to the whole of the British Army, while under the new system it will be open only to the few cadets at Sandhurst who elect for Indian service. This means that practically the Staff Corps is open only to those young men whose parents or guardians desire them to choose an Indian career. A narrow field like this is bound to make itself felt on the Staff Corps as a whole, and the Indian service will never be able to obtain men who have been in the Artillery or Marines, or who have seen more of British Cavalry and Infantry than one short year's attached duty. A very fair number of officers now in the Staff Corps once served in the Artillery or Marines, and we may be sure the Staff Corps as a body gains by numbering such men in its ranks. In short, the new system cannot supply sufficient recruits; will lower the status of the Staff Corps; will narrow the field of selection in such a way that the quality of the recruits as a whole cannot help being lowered; and will prevent many young officers of good abilities from adopting a career they may find themselves eminently suited for. Government would do well to ponder before adopting it without protest.

THE FACTORY LAWS.

(Times of India.)

It is to be hoped that the resolutions passed at the Labour Conference in Berlin, which are to be transmitted to the Government of India for consideration in connection with the amendment of the Indian factory law, will also be sent to the Governments of China and Japan. At the Berlin Conference the Indian Government was not represented, and the delegates had no information whatever which would have justified them in making recommendations with regard to the legislative regulation of labour in this country. To do them justice, the delegates were far from committing the absurdity of formulating opinions on matters quite beyond their experience. The industrial problem in India is wholly different from that which is the subject of so much anxious thought in Europe. For one thing the inertia of the immense populations, from which a mere handful of mill-hands are drawn by the prospect of fixed pay and comparatively light and easy work, forbids absolutely the exaction by capitalists or their representatives of the excessive toil which the fierce competition of the proletariat renders possible in countries where the bulk of the population is divorced from the soil. No Oriental will work himself to death for any paymaster; he will give moderate and intermittent labour in the manner and with the limitations which suit him, and to which he and his fathers before him were accustomed. That the age at which boys and girls should be allowed to work in mills ought to be raised is admitted on all hands; but to go further, and arbitrarily limit the hours of adult labour on the plea that Indian workmen and workwomen are unable to take care of their own interests will not do. Such a course, if it should prove effective for its real purpose—that of crippling the Indian mill industry—would hand over, not to Manchester, but to the mills now at work and under construction in Japan and China the cotton trade of the further East. For it is not to be supposed that the Governments of those countries will feel themselves under any obligation to legislate in accordance with the spirit of the recommendations of the Berlin Labour Conference.

OLD SOLDIERS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The papers are occupied with all sorts of schemes for filling the ranks of our regular army, and for finding employment when they leave the services for old and young soldiers of exemplary character. It is, in our opinion, little short of a national disgrace that it should be in any way necessary for private individuals to bestir themselves in the cause of the many excellent men of all ages who yearly leave the army. But, by whatever means, these men are in process of being materially assisted to find employment on entering upon civil life. We would say a word for the far larger class of men who have made good soldiers, but who, from many little peculiarities, natural or acquired, do not and will not get regular employment on leaving the army. The case is very hard for such men, and harder still for those of them who have done nearly all their soldiering in India. They find when they arrive in England that such a struggle is going on for bare existence as they never dreamed of in their comfortable Indian life, and many a letter reaches this country from such men to the comrades they have left behind telling of the sore straits to which they have been or are reduced. It seems to us that these men have at least as strong a claim as any others upon their countrymen and upon the Government they have served; the very faults which stand in the way of present employment have been fostered in the service. The bitter cry of all these men is that they wish they had never left the service, and yet which of us can blame them if, after six or seven years spent in India, they seized eagerly upon the chance of going home and gave no thought to that which should come after. We do not suggest that civil appointments should be given to these men, nor do we see why private enterprise should be called upon to find for them a means of livelihood; but we do say that facilities should be given to such men to return to the service, where they might form the nucleus of old soldiers so urgently required among our home battalions. But let us be spared the recital of how So-and-So, who was a good soldier and a cheery comrade, is getting his living as a sandwich man, or his meals from the charity of a soup-kitchen, simply because he cannot get back into the army, and has not the education or the exemplary character which alone can ensure him employment in civil life.

BENGAL.

(May 21.)

ON account of the heat in Calcutta the Port Officer has advised the commanders of vessels in the Hughli not to expose their crews to the sun between the hours of 11 A.M. and 4 P.M.

A POSTMASTER in the Rungpore district has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment for criminal breach of trust with respect to a parcel containing jewellery ordered from Calcutta by himself, but which he returned as refused, after abstracting its contents and putting in copper pieces instead.

THE principal opponents to the new salt rules at Calcutta are the old Marwari contractors who supplied coolies. On Saturday fees were paid for two scales to work at the golas, and Customs officers were sent; but the contractors persuaded the merchants not to take delivery, and paid them the fees they had lodged.

CASES of cholera have commenced to occur amongst the crowded third-class carriages on the North-Western Railway line. On the 11th inst. a third-class passenger travelling from Ghaziabad was taken out from a carriage at Lala Musa, suffering from a severe attack of cholera. The man was at once carried to the hospital for treatment.

A TELEGRAM from the Government of India, dated the 15th instant, to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, on the question of taxing consignors' profits, says:—"The Government has no doubt of the legality of its orders, and, as the information before it shows similar profits are now liable to assessment in the United Kingdom, it cannot admit beforehand that the difficulties in the way of their assessment in India are insuperable. The Government, however, is willing to fully consider any arguments the Chamber may wish to put forward, and will await the receipt of the pending memorial." The local Governments have been instructed meanwhile to suspend the action of the orders of October 23rd last.

"REIS AND RAYYAT" says:—"The practice of flaying alive goats in Calcutta, coupled with the inadequate punishment awarded by the honorary presidency magistrates, has, we see, attracted the attention of the Press in England—Mr. Labouchere, in particular, making it an occasion for attributing hard-heartedness to Natives of India generally. In simple justice we must exonerate our Mahomedan brethren from all responsibility in the scandal. It was the brutal conduct of some Hindu butchers of Calcutta that first brought the matter under public notice. That it has reached the dignity of an English agitation we owe to the incapacity of the honorary magistrates who tried them, to realise the gravity of the offence committed by the butchers.

MADRAS.

SAYAD ABDUL ALI, Divisional Magistrate and Collector of Nagar, Karnool, has been suspended by the Revenue Secretary of Hyderabad, pending the inquiry into certain charges brought against him by the ryots within his jurisdiction.

SAYAD ALI BELGRAMI, B.A., Director-General of Mines, who is a Sanskrit scholar, has just been appointed Examiner in Sanskrit at the forthcoming University examinations in Madras. He is the first Mahomedan so appointed.

A EUROPEAN child, named Mary Doran, aged ten years, had a miraculous escape on Friday last. While the 5.45 P.M. south-west mail train was between Veeringipuram and Guriatham stations the child fell out of a second-class carriage. The father on reaching Guriatham, missed the child, and when he, with the station-master, trolied down and found the child two miles away from the station, she was very slightly bruised.

THE prospects of a fair take of pearl oysters at the renewal of the fishery at Tuticorin on the premature closure of the Ceylon fishery, when the divers returned to Tuticorin, have, according to the Madras Times, been brought to an untimely end, and the fishery was finally closed on the 5th inst. The prospects of the fishery were fair, the weather was favourable, large numbers of boats and merchants were present, and about 100 of the latter only arrived at the town just when the business was closed. But the divers were panic-stricken, and declined on any account to approach the banks, on account of the appearance of sharks, which attacked and wounded a couple of divers while at work. Captain Baker, the Superintendent of the Fishery, assisted by the Jadathalavamore, or headman of the divers, did his utmost to induce the divers to make another trial, but failed.

MR. G. JAMES, the Medical Evangelist in charge of the Leper Wards at the south Travancore Medical Mission, writes as follows:—"The work of doctoring and feeding the lepers is not an easy work. I find that as their physical frames are so much effected and rendered useless and offensive, so their moral tone is very low and offensive. Generally every one of them is proud, passionate, fretful, and impatient. Several of them when they came here were not ready to acknowledge that they were suffering from leprosy, but they had the complaint as the effect of snake-bites, rat-bites, and poisonous drugs. Their whole aim in coming here is not to get food and clothing only, but to be entirely cured of their disease. Hence their cry for medicines, yea for specific pills and powders, is constant and unbearable."

BOMBAY.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—Slight rain in three talukas of Kanara. Harvesting of late crops completed, except in four districts. Preparations for next season's crops progressing in all districts. Fodder scarce in one taluka of Hyderabad, Nassik, and Dharwar. Agricultural stock poor in four talukas of Nassik, and one of Hyderabad. Water scarce in four talukas of Nassik and one of Dharwar.

SIR ARTHUR HAVELOCK, the newly-appointed Governor of the Island of Ceylon, arrived at Bombay en route for Colombo in the Peninsular and Oriental mail steamer Clyde, which dropped anchor in the harbour at about 9.30 A.M. on Monday. Sir Arthur Havelock, who succeeds Sir Arthur Gordon, the present Governor of Ceylon, left London in the above vessel on April 25th, accompanied by Lady and Miss Havelock, Captain V. Pirie, A.D.C., and three attendants. When the Clyde arrived on Monday he was received on board by Mr. Monteath, the Collector of Customs, and was escorted on shore by that gentleman in the Indian Marine launch Kate, and the party immediately proceeded to the Esplanade Hotel. The passage out was an exceedingly pleasant one, the only drawback being astoppage of about twenty hours in the Suez Canal, due to another vessel having grounded there. Sir Arthur E. Havelock, accompanied by Lady and Miss Havelock, and attended by Captain Pirie, A.D.C., left Victoria Terminus for Kirkee by the midday train on Tuesday. Sir Arthur and party, who travelled in a special reserved saloon that was attached to the Raichore mail train, will remain at Guneshkhind for a couple of days, leaving for Bombay by Thursday night's train, and arriving at the Victoria Terminus early on Friday morning, in order to depart for Ceylon by the P. and O. steamer Clyde in the afternoon.

THE trial of the three accused said to be concerned in the attempt to murder Mr. Shamrao N. Laud, Dewan of Cambay, concluded on Monday before Mr. Merwanjee Pestonjee Daru-hanawalla, the Sessions Judge of that place. Mr. Budrudin Tyabji, barrister-at-law, appeared to prosecute, whereas Mr. D. D. Davur, barrister-at-law, represented the accused Ruttonchund, the two other accused not being defended by counsel. The accused Ruttonchund is a mehta in the service of Najoomkhan, the brother of the Nawab of Cambay. It was alleged that Najoomkhan and his mehta Ruttonchund instigated Mahomed and Amir, the first two accused, who are bad characters, to murder the Dewan, a reward of Rs. 500 being offered to each. The first two accused, who incriminated each other, made a confession before the magistrate who tried the case in the first instance, but they withdrew it before the Sessions Judge on Monday. The two accused were, however, convicted, and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. Ruttonchund, who has been in custody pending the trial for about a month, was acquitted by the Court.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT MAHALAXMI.

13,00,000 DAMAGES.

On Thursday night Bombay witnessed another of those extensive and destructive fires which have lately been so frequent. The huge block of buildings situated near the Mahalaxmi Railway-station, known as the Gordon Mills, of which the agents are Messrs. D. M. Petit and Sons, was completely burnt down. The fire was first noticed in the mule department of the mill by a ramosee on duty, at about seven o'clock. He immediately gave the alarm, and there were soon some thousands of mill-hands who were on their way home on the spot. A good deal of confusion appears to have prevailed however, for although the mill is provided with telephonic communication a good deal of time was lost owing to the people using the telephone neglecting to give the number 5,000 which means "fire." In consequence of this the fire-engine stations were not alarmed as quickly as they might otherwise have been. As has already been stated, the fire originated in the central portion of the mule department, which is on the second story of the mill, and its cause has been variously assigned to friction of machinery and spontaneous combustion. The fire immediately spread to the floor of the second story, and being saturated with oil, in a few minutes the whole of the second story was in a blaze. From this portion of the building the fire quickly spread to the bailing, rolling, and bundling departments, where the machinery and stores were completely destroyed. In the bailing department were 800 bales of yarn, of the value of about a lakh and twenty-five thousand rupees, all of which were destroyed, except only about forty bales, which were taken out more or less damaged. The wind was at first blowing from south to north-east—that is, in the direction of the whole of the mill premises—and the consequence was that when the fire-engines arrived, the entire mill, with the exception of a wing lately erected, and in which were several new boilers and engines, was burning furiously. Although there was a good supply of water and the engines in readiness, they were perfectly powerless to do anything for the burning building.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAUB.

(May 21.)

It is practically settled that, owing to the light programme which is now before them, no meeting of the Legislative Council will be held in Simla before June.

CAPTAIN R. TEMPLE, who has been placed on special duty at Simla, is making good progress with his work of preparing the rules for the Cantonments Act. The Code, which will probably run to some six or seven hundred pages, may be expected to issue within a couple of months, as about two-thirds of the work has already been completed.

ALTHOUGH no definite decision with reference to the Simla-Kalka Railway has yet been arrived at, it is evident that the question of whether the railway is to be made by Government or constructed under a State guarantee by a private company is receiving considerable attention. It is reported that the Viceroy is taking a keen interest in the matter, and final conclusions are likely to be arrived at within the next few months.

AT about twenty minutes to six on the evening of the 18th inst., a sharp shock of earthquake occurred at Benares, the direction apparently being south to north. There appeared to be three distinct waves, lasting in all between two and three seconds, and accompanied by a rumbling noise. Previous to the earthquake the weather had become very close and oppressive. Beyond the falling of loose plaster no damage appears to have been done to any buildings.

A CONTEMPORARY is informed:—There is every hope that within the space of two months the Taj will be permanently lit up with the electric light. It is proposed to place 1,200 candle-power lights on each of the front minarets, and 1,000-power lights on each of the back minarets and on the Musjid and Jawab. The main building will have no light stationed upon it, and so will be magnificently thrown into relief. The expense has been computed at Rs. 12,000.

THE INDEBTEDNESS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.

The Pioneer remarks:—

If Government requires its subordinates to keep free of debts it must first see that they are provided with the wherewithal; in other words, that they are adequately paid, so that their emoluments are sufficient to raise them above the ordinary wants of their status in life. Can it be confidently asserted that the scale of sanctioned salaries effectually secures this end? The recent Commission that inquired into the matter pointed out the cardinal fact on which all reforms would have to turn, that the lower grades were hopelessly underpaid. But it is always an easy matter to decry the scale of public salaries, and many, perhaps too many, will be found who would be only too willing to lend their interested support to agitation in favour of higher pay all round. It is, therefore, worth while ascertaining if the complaint is just, and to recover, if possible, the causes of this widespread indebtedness in the ministerial ranks of the public service. There is no denying the fact that an improved style of living, necessitating larger expenditure, has been adopted by the class who are most affected by debts—we are now speaking of the Natives mostly. At the same time the customary lavish expenditure on social ceremonies has been maintained. While these causes have contributed to increase the expenditure of these people the recognised salary has remained stationary. Besides, increased supervision and vigilance have nearly stamped out venality from the various branches of the public service, and have thus materially curtailed the illicit "pickings" which used not long ago to form so substantial a part of a subordinate's income. Thus pressed on the one hand by a disproportionate expenditure and watched closely on the other by a vigilant superior authority so that any form of unrecognised gain is out of the question, or only possible under serious risk, these servants of the State are driven to contract debts which they are ill able to pay. The notoriety which all Government service enjoyed at one time of being indirectly lucrative has not quite passed away, and this has led Natives of better classes to seek Government posts regardless of pay, and while filling them to keep up an empty show far beyond their real means. Once in, they are expected to do wonders by their numerous relations, who settle on them like harpies. They drift deeper and deeper into debt, and eventually resign themselves in despair to the money-lender. Now, it is to be feared that with men who are thus involved the rigorous application of the new rules would do more harm than good. They should certainly be checked in their downward career, and this can best be done by treating each case on its merits, and not by hasty generalisation. Discipline can thus be enforced without the appearance of harshness, and some progress may be made in teaching these unfortunates to practise economy and thrift.

THE experiments made in the Burdwan Division of paying rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, through the medium of postal money-orders, has proved so successful that the Board of Revenue have recommended the general adoption of the system throughout the lower provinces. The Lieutenant-Governor, while not accepting the recommendation in its entirety, has directed that rent may be paid in this way, in the Burdwan, Rajshahye, Presidency and Dacca Divisions.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE LEPROSY BILL.

(Rast Goftar.)

It is stated that there is no likelihood of the Leper Bill being proceeded with by the Government of India next cold weather. The hope was generally expressed on the death of Father Damien that it would awake the Government to the necessity of strict segregation for the lepers in India, which at present is the chosen home of leprosy. The Indian authorities did show some signs of activity, and it was considered to be a matter of absolute certainty that a measure embodying the principle of segregation would be carried through the Supreme Legislative Council. But the Government are now going to sleep over the Bill—at all events, until they have obtained "complete proof" of the contagiousness of this cruel disease from the medical authorities, both in this country and in England. Opinion will continue to be divided on the contagiousness of leprosy, and the Government will have perhaps, little difficulty in persuading themselves that they have not obtained the complete proof which would have justified any action on their part. We think that segregation should be enforced as a remedial measure, irrespective of the question of contagiousness; because, although there is a difference of opinion on this point, it is pretty generally allowed even by medical men like Sir George Birdwood, who do not believe that the disease is contagious, that strict segregation is necessary to arrest the spread of leprosy and eventually to stamp it out. Sir George once gave a very bold proof of his conviction that leprosy was non-contagious by quaffing a goblet of sherbet prepared by a Mahomedan gentleman's servant whose hands and fingers bore the loathsome taint upon them. Yet he emphatically declares that segregation is the one measure necessary to prevent the multiplication of lepers. It was this measure that exterminated the disease which was so rampant in the Middle Ages in Europe, and we fear the Government of India will incur a fearful responsibility by refusing to pass this healing measure, under the pretext of a difference of opinion as to the contagiousness of leprosy, which has nothing more than an academical interest, so far as the action which it is their duty to take is concerned.

THE PENALTY FOR DINING WITH CHRISTIANS.

(Rast Goftar.)

It will be remembered that in one of our issues of January last we published a paragraph giving particulars of a dinner held at Dr. Atmaram Pandurang's house, which was attended by Hindoo gentlemen belonging to various sections of the community as well as by a European lady, Dr. Emma Brainerd Ryder, and a Native lady, who is a convert to Christianity, Pandita Ramabai. We expressed our pleasure at the gathering as a step towards the infringement of unreasonable caste restrictions, and our paragraph was largely copied by the English and vernacular papers of this presidency. We are now sorry to hear that some of the diners have to suffer on account of the publicity given to their names. The ire of caste has been aroused, and they have been called to severe account for their pollution. One of the persons who responded to Dr. Atmaram's invitation was Mr. Nursingrao Bholanath, Civil Servant at Sholapore; another was his brother, and a third was Ramanbhai, son of Mr. Mahipatram Rupram. Caste has imposed a humiliating penalty upon these young men. It has resolved that they should change their sacred thread, go through the purgation of a prayaschit, bathe in some sacred tank or river, and, purchasing a seer of ghee light a lamp therewith at the temple of Hatkeshwar Mahadeo. We don't know whether these enlightened gentlemen will have the courage and firmness to withstand the shame and humiliation which they are sentenced to undergo by their caste. We don't know whether they have not already submitted to it quietly. If they have, the pleasure we expressed at their enlightened unconcern to dine with their fellow-brothers on the broad basis of Hindooism will be very much marred.

VIRTUE is its own reward in these days because it stands little chance of getting anything more substantial. A sepoy in a large firm in Bombay found in the street the other day eight thousand rupees. This sum had been paid by a local firm that day to a Marwarri, and had evidently been dropped by the way. Inquiries were made, and the money restored; and a week later the honest sepoy, who might quite easily have "sat tight" and made merry for the rest of his life on, to him, so prodigious a sum was rewarded with five rupees!

INDIAN ARMY REFORM.—I.

It may be remembered or have passed out of memory that in 1879 a Commission was appointed by the Government of India to inquire into, and report upon, the whole question of military organisation in India. That Commission sat at Simla, and the late Sir Ashley Eden was president of it. According to a Blue-book just issued the Report of this Commission was presented towards the end of the year 1879; but it was not taken into full consideration until 1881, when it underwent a prolonged and exhaustive consideration by the Government of India, and their opinions and recommendations on the different proposals of the Commission were submitted to Her Majesty's Government during the course of that year in a series of despatches. It is no secret that there was a considerable difference of opinion amongst military men in India as to the value which such a Commission, presided over by a Bengal civilian excessively clever but excessively prejudiced, was likely to exhibit, but it was taken for granted that one recommendation would certainly be made to the effect that the Presidential system should be abolished with the least possible delay. A good deal has been done to carry out this recommendation. The separate Presidential establishments of European artillery and infantry (in Bengal Cavalry also) have been abolished, and these forces absorbed into the British army. In 1883, in pursuance of the recommendations of the Army Commission and the Government of India, the three separate Presidential Ordnance Departments were amalgamated into one, with a Director-General at the head of it, attached to the Government of India.

The administration of the Punjab Frontier Force has been transferred from the Punjab Government to the Commander-in-Chief in India. This most sensible and excellent arrangement was not brought about without considerable difficulty and opposition on the part of the Punjab Government officials, who, of course, wished to retain in their own hands all the patronage which the control of this splendid force gave to them. But to military men of unbiassed and independent judgment it seems an extraordinary anomaly that a force intended for the first line of defence when danger was most likely to threaten should be altogether under the command and control of a civilian Lieutenant-Governor and his secretaries. This anomaly has now been done away with, and none of the evils prophesied regarding its abolition have come to pass. The esprit de corps which was held in such high esteem by the officers and men of the frontier army has not suffered, as it was said it would be, by the change, but on the contrary.

Further sweeping away of local influences has taken place to the benefit of the Service generally. The three presidential departments of the Judge Advocate-General have been amalgamated, and the defence works throughout India have been taken in hand by the Government of India. In a despatch from the Viceroy in Council, dated June 1st, 1888, it is stated that only a small remnant remains of the old Presidential system, such as the commissariat, transport, medical, and clothing departments; and the recommendation is that whatever does remain of that system should be finally abolished, and that the entire administration of all the Indian armies should be made over to the Commander-in-Chief in India, acting in direct communication with the Commander-in-Chief of the local armies, and under the direct orders of the Government of India. The despatch in question goes on to say:—"We think that while the Governments of Madras and Bombay will not be called on to surrender any sensible degree of authority or patronage, the Commander-in-Chief of those Presidencies will be distinctly gainers by the change, inasmuch as they will then come into direct command of the whole of their respective armies, of which at present a part is withdrawn from their control. We would add that the present holders of those offices might retain the title of Commander-in-Chief; nor do we see any reason why they and their successors should not continue with advantage to be members of the local councils. The proposed measure in this respect, also, would be one of decentralisation as regards the various administrative departments of the army. For, although these would be controlled by the Government of India, there would be this difference, that, whereas at present, under the progress of circumstances, the limits of departments, commands, and territorial jurisdiction have come to overlap each other in a very confused way, hereafter the limits of commands and departmental agencies would all coincide. The Commander-in-Chief of each army would have the immediate command of that army, and would also have the services of departmental officers, commissariat, ordnance, medical, military account, &c., with concurrent jurisdiction. Under such an arrangement it would be practicable to localise authority in a much greater degree than is now possible."

In this despatch Lord Dufferin, Sir Frederick Roberts, and the other members of Council insist upon the importance of maintaining the separate constitution and segregation of the different local armies, and the despatch concludes with this urgent appeal:—

"We believe it to be now generally recognised on all sides that the reform which we are advocating cannot be much longer deferred, and we submit that the present time is peculiarly appropriate for carrying it out. The Government of India in 1881 dwelt on the necessity for making the change deliberately in time of peace, and not waiting until it was forced on by the pressure of events. We would urge that this warning still retains all its strength, and that no further delay should be allowed to occur before utilising the present time of tranquillity for the purpose."

How these warnings and recommendations have been received and acted upon must form the subject-matter of another article.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Government of India have decided that the same privileges should be granted to a non-commissioned officer acting for a warrant officer on furlough, whether the warrant officer has taken furlough to England or in India.

THE Government of India have decided that a military officer in civil employ cannot claim exemption from the payment of income-tax on his tentage allowance, although he may be in possession of a serviceable tent and certify to that effect. This decision is irrespective of the duration of the appointment.

A QUETTA telegram states that orders have been issued for the garrisoning of the frontier posts of Hindu Bagh at the north-west end of the Gomal Valley with a troop of the 7th Bombay Cavalry and 100 men of the 13th Bombay Infantry, under command of a British officer of the 13th. The troops were to march on the 15th for Hindu Bagh.

CAPTAIN CUTHBERTSON, R.H.A., who died of cholera at Calcutta on the 5th inst., only recently arrived in the country, on appointment to Q Battery R.H.A., at Umballa. Almost immediately after joining he went on leave to his brother, Under-Secretary to the Government, at Calcutta, hoping to have some big game shooting; but as he could not get this he proposed to go to Kashmir. He had made his arrangements for this trip, when he was taken ill at about four o'clock on Monday morning, the 5th; and notwithstanding that everything possible was done, he died about nine that night.

COLONEL F. J. CALDECOTT, R.A., Superintendent of the Gunpowder Factory, Kirkee, an expert in the manufacture of gunpowder and the discoverer, we believe, of the method of making prism brown powder in India, has, with his chief powder-maker, been deputed to England for a period of months for the purpose of studying the improvements made in the manufacture of the various powders required for use in this country, and selecting machinery suitable for the manufacture of cordite and Walthamite for the new magazine rifles. Colonel Caldecott will visit all the large private powder factories and powder machinery factories at home and on the Continent of Europe, the several Government ordnance factories, and the chemical department of the War Office.

THE following appears in the Lahore paper:—"A story comes to us from Woolwich. It appears that some months ago when experiments were being carried out at Plumstead Marshes to determine the effect of the bullets from the new rifles on animal structures, a regular War Office indent was sent to the officer commanding the Riding Establishment to supply on a certain date five riding horses. As the purpose for which they were required was not specified in any way the officer in question concluded that they were probably meant for some foreign officers or generals to ride, and, true to the old gunner maxim always to send out the best you can for the credit of the establishment, he selected his five best-looking and best-trained horses and sent them off with their riders to the rendezvous appointed. As the day wore on and no horses returned, the O.C. began to feel a little anxious and took to pacing up and down the front of the stables, for these animals were his special pets. Imagine his delight when about 5 P.M. five dusty and limping horse gunners, looking thoroughly sick and disgusted, turned up, and reported that the Committee had been very well satisfied with the result of the experiment; and the knacker who had the contract for hides and hoofs was to be sent down at once and bury the carcasses."

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 2.

INDIAN POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. MACKINTOSH asked the Postmaster-General whether by receiving pre-payment, the Post Office was held to undertake the safe delivery of letters, packets and parcels from India; whether there were nevertheless numerous complaints made of the tampering with letters, packets, and parcels in transit, and of their contents being removed or injured; and whether these robberies, chiefly affecting private soldiers in India and their friends in the United Kingdom, could be stopped.

Mr. RAIKES: In reply to the hon. member, I have to state that in the case of all letters, whether paid or unpaid, the Post Office does all in its power to deliver them safely. During the year ended March 31 last, the number of parcels received from India was 47,671, and of these the number alleged to have been tampered with was four. There is good reason to believe, however, that in two of these four cases the tampering, if tampering there was, did not take place in the Post Office. Out of the 47,671 parcels the number alleged to have been damaged was 55. In many of these cases the contents were very fragile, such as butterflies, clay figures, and soapstone models, or were not securely packed. As regards letters, we have no exact information of the number received from India during the same period, but the hon. member will understand that they were very much more numerous than the parcels. Out of the total number, whatever it was, the number alleged to have been tampered with was nine, and in two of these nine cases the articles abstracted were eventually recovered. Whether the losses chiefly affected private soldiers or not I am unable to say, but be that as it may, the hon. member will, I think, agree with me that it is not a bad record, and that there is not very much to correct.

JUNE 3.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

Sir G. CAMPBELL asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true, as stated in the Indian newspapers, that, notwithstanding the presence in this country of so many of the claimants under the Indian Civil Service rules, it was proposed to allow a number of the principal European Civil servants now in India to come home "on duty" at the public expense to give evidence before the proposed committee, or to allow them to draw full Indian allowances beyond those to which they might be entitled under the ordinary leave rules, or in any other form to place a burden on the Indian taxpayer, to enable them to press the claims of their various services in this country.

Sir J. FERGUSSON: It is not true. The committee, if appointed, would itself determine what witnesses are necessary. The Secretary of State would, of course, give every reasonable facility for the attendance of such witnesses as the Committee might desire to examine ### CLOTHED WITH BRIEF AUTHORITY.

The exigencies of the service, supplemented by the demands of shikar and leave on urgent private affairs to the nearest hill station, had reduced the strength of officers for duty with that gallant corps known to the whole of India as the 10th Regiment of Cavalry of the Indrabad Contingent to the exceedingly small number of four, viz., the Colonel and three gay and débonnaire subalterns—Lieutenants Bonamy, Pennant and Dare. It was the slack time of the year. Parades were few and far between: the annual bugbear of the General's inspection was a thing of the past, and a general feeling of aram and laissez aller pervaded the regiment.

"Heard the news?" says Pennant to Dare when they met at mess one night. "The colonel has gone into camp for three days, and Bonamy is left in command."

"By Jove! what a lark," says Dare. "I vote we three go out to-morrow morning and look up that old panther in the bir: when Bonamy comes we'll square him, and have a real good old shoot all to ourselves."

As he spoke Mr. Bonamy entered the mess, and it was observed that he had got himself up with unusual care, that he wore an exceedingly high and stiff collar, and that there was about his demeanour an air of importance and dignity, distinctly unusual, which did not sit altogether lightly on his smooth and boyish countenance. He bowed slightly as he entered the room, and then, dinner being announced, led the way from the ante-room with the remark: "Shall we come to dinner, gentlemen?" and sat himself down in the colonel's chair, clearing his throat preparatory to attacking his soup with a deep gruffing sound which had hitherto been regarded as the peculiar prerogative of the colonel. Dare and Pennant, at opposite ends of the table, looked at their new commanding officer with some amazement, and at each other with glances of suppressed mirth.

"I say Bonamy, old cock," at last said Dare, "Pennant and I were thinking, as there is not anything particular going on and as the colonel is away, we three might just give ourselves a little holiday to-morrow, and go out for the day to look after that panther you missed last week."

"Sorry I can't fall in with your wishes, gentlemen," replied Bonamy, assuming a still graver air of decorum and rigidity; "you have evidently not seen the order-book. There's a commanding officer's parade at seven o'clock to-morrow morning."

This announcement was received with exclamations of derision from both of the juniors: Mr. Dare expressing the opinion that this "sort of thing was all tommy-rot, doncher-know," while Mr. Pennant remarked that it was a "condemned and odoriferous shame," or words to that effect. The commanding officer smiled grimly, but did not deem it worthy of his exalted position to notice these criticisms further than by adding: "And I shall expect you young gentlemen to be on parade in good time." This was exceedingly galling to the young gentlemen whom he addressed, for they were both born in the year of grace which had seen Mr. Bonamy brought into the world, and his seniority in the regiment was a matter of days only, and had been brought about by what they termed "a beastly fluke." The rest of the dinner passed off with some reserve, and Mr. Bonamy, disdaining the olive branch of "a quiet little three pool" which was held out to him by Mr. Pennant, passed from the mess at an unusually early hour. It were perhaps vain to attempt to record the observations of Messrs. Dare and Pennant when they found themselves relieved of the presence of their commanding officer.

Next morning the regiment paraded at the appointed hour. The two junior subalterns, after some slight and probably perfunctory duties with their respective squadrons, met to continue in private the conversation of the previous evening. "There's one blessing," said Pennant, "that duffer, Bonamy, doesn't know more than two manœuvres—advance in column of troops from the right, and left wheel into line—so we shall get off pretty easily. Look out! Here he comes."

Mr. Bonamy came on to parade under circumstances of great importance, and proceeded without any preliminaries to put the regiment through a prolonged series of the most intricate and exhausting movements: he kept them at the gallop for a quarter of an hour at a stretch; twisted and turned them about; galloped them again, and after a good two hours of violent exercise drew them up into line, the horses covered with sweat, foam, and dust, the men hot, tired, and jaded, and the two subalterns in the last stage of exasperation.

"Did you ever see anything like this?" said Dare to Pennant when they met for a brief moment in the pause of the drill. "The brute has been mugging up the drill-book all night, and has got the d— thing by heart."

"No talking on parade, if you please, Mr. Dare," calls out the relentless commanding officer. The regiment will march past by squadrons—walk march.

"What infernal cheek," says Pennant, turning to repeat the word of command to his squadron.

Lieutenant Bonamy rode leisurely to the saluting base and took up a position of critical observation while the regiment wheeled into squadrons to march past the commanding officer. The first squadron, led by Pennant, passed by, Lieutenant Bonamy receiving the salute of the leader with solemn gravity; then came two squadrons led by Native officers, and, last, Dare's squadron. Whether the absurdity of the whole affair suddenly struck the commanding officer, or whether Satan entered into him, or whatever may have been the reason, the fact remains that, in receiving the salute of Lieutenant Dare, the commanding officer dropped the mask of the martinet which he had so successfully maintained, and, in the words of the bard of Ingoldsby—

"He put his thumb unto his nose and spread his fingers out."

"That'll teach you Johnnies to cultivate a little respect for your seniors," he observed, as they rode off parade together.—Pioneer. M. M.

THE EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the East India Association—an organisation of Anglo-Indians and Native gentlemen established in London and India "for the disinterested and independent advocacy and promotion, by all legitimate means, of the public interests and welfare of the inhabitants of India generally," and liberally supported by the Indian aristocracy for that purpose—was held on Friday, May 30, at the offices, Westminster Chambers, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., G.C.S.I., presiding. The report of the Council for the past year showed that the objects of the Association have been carried on steadily with a view to increasing its usefulness and influence, unswayed by political partisanship in this country, or class feeling in India. Many of the suggestions made by the Association, and the principles advocated by it from time to time, have received the approval of the governing authorities, and have been wholly or partially accepted in the conduct of Indian affairs. This year the Association's labours for the abolition of the duties on plate have been crowned with success. During the year there has been a considerable accession of membership. Sir Richard Temple, M.P., G.C.S.I., was re-elected President of the Association, and among the Vice-Presidents are the Marquis of Ripon, the Marquis of Tweeddale, Lord Harris, Lord Randolph Churchill, M.P., Lord Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., Sir George Balfour, M.P., Sir Jas. Fergusson, M.P., General Scott, his Highness the Rao of Cutch, his Highness the Chief of Wadwan, his Highness the Maharajah Holkar of Indore, the Thakore Sahib of Gondal, his Highness the Chief of Palitana, his Excellency Ragoonath Row, the Nawab of Joonaghur, and Mr. Gowrishaukar Udeshaikar, C.S.I., together with a large Administrative Council, comprising about thirty gentlemen who have served in India in various civil, military, or commercial capacities, and who take an active personal interest in the prosperity and good government of that portion of the British Empire. General Sir Orfeur Cavanagh, K.C.S.I., is Chairman of the latter body, and General Sir Richard Meade, K.C.S.I., Vice-Chairman.

THE TAX UPON PROFITS.

The Bombay Chamber of Commerce is understood to have sent in a vigorous protest to the Government of India against the remarkable attempt which is being made in Calcutta to reuder the income-tax intolerable to the business community. If the Chamber were less representative than it is we should have suggested that its protest be backed up by a memorial on behalf of the mercantile community at large. But the belief prevails that Government, despite their refusal to reconsider the matter until some experience has been had of the working of the new arrangement, will not persevere in the course they have set out upon. The contention has indeed been put forward that the right way of resisting the attempt to levy the tax upon profits upon consignments is to bring the matter into the High Court, a strong belief prevailing some in quarters that the demand is illegal. Upon that point judgment may be suspended; but there need be no suspense of judgment in regard to the impossibility of equitably levying the tax after the fashion sketched out in the famous Calcutta circular. What is preposterous and unprecedented in the proceeding is the experimental way in which the levy is being made. Calcutta enjoys the peculiar privilege of being experimented upon, no other city, so far as we know, having been favoured with a duplicate of Mr. Kilby's circular. One consequence of trying it on in this way is that that if the experiment fails one portion of the tax-paying community will have had to contribute while the remainder will come off scot-free. Bombay, of course, would have no objection to being passed over, but the inequality of treatment of the two cities would be scandalous all the same, and the administration of the income-tax would be brought into contempt. Anything more vicious than this localised experimental taxation cannot be conceived. In England it would have been announced out of existence in forty-eight hours, and the collapse of the attempt would have been as prompt and more humiliating than Mr. Lowe's withdrawal of his famous but much more reputable tax.—Bombay Gazette.

THE SERVICES AND PHYSICAL FITNESS.

Physical fitness is already a test for admission to the services, Civil and Military, in England and India; but to this is likely to be soon added another, viz., that of physical strength. Attention to this question, it is said, was drawn by the fact that the system of competitive examinations on paper had led to too much importance being attached, in the selection of young men for the public services, to the intellect in preference to bodily strength. It is beginning to be recognised, says a London medical paper, writing on this question, "that precocious intellects are not always the best, and that those who are endowed with full physical powers are likely, as life advances, to acquire those qualities of the mind which fit the possessor to become a leader of men, and which in the position we hold as the greatest colonisers the world has known, are of priceless value in dealing with the nations with whom we are thrown into relation." This view of the matter would, at first sight, look ominous in its bearing on the question of the Indian Civil Service competition, especially in the light of the opinions expressed by members of the India Council disapproving of the enhancement of the limit of age as being favourable to Indian candidates and injurious to their English brethren; but, in the first place, the discussion has originated in connection not with India but with Her Majesty's Public Services all over the Empire and in all departments; and, in the next, a strong physique joined to good mental powers cannot but add to the efficiency of the public service, and is, therefore, beneficial to the public interests, and the proposed addition to the physical fitness test, or rather its expansion is unexceptionable.—Indian Spectator.

CANALS IN THE N.W.P.

Considering the importance of canals to the well-being of certain parts of India, and the difficulty of inducing the Natives to use canal water on any rational system, or indeed to pay for it at all till drought has half ruined them, every account of progress in canal administration is a cause for satisfaction. The last Irrigation Report of the North-West Provinces is as satisfactory as could be desired in this respect, showing an income of Rs. 57,29,953, which gives a surplus of nearly Rs. 87,000; whereas there had been a deficit of more than Rs. 24,000 the year before. There is in the Provinces only one Famine Protective work, the Betwa Canal, and the loss on that was reduced from Rs. 2,13,345 to Rs. 1,95,872. The net revenue amounted to 3.88 per cent. on the total capital invested in canals, and to 4.15 per cent. on the capital of the four productive works. The crops which chiefly had the advantage of the increased irrigation were sugarcane, rice, and indigo. Cotton, poppy, and grains, besides rice, showed a falling off. The estimated value of all crops raised by canal water was 530 lakhs, equal to 66.4 per cent of the total capital invested in the canals. The results from navigation are less hopeful than those from irrigation, the main cause apparently being that sufficient waterway has not been completed yet. The irrigation results we have quoted are the more notable because the North-West Provinces have enjoyed five consecutive years of heavy rainfall. From a canal officer's point of view a drought is a good thing, for it drives the people to use his water; and two or three successive droughts gives them a habit of relying on the canals.—Englishman.

THE CHIN-LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

The withdrawal of the troops engaged in the Chin-Lushai Expedition has now been carried out, and only small garrisons remain in the permanent posts which have been formed at various points which it is considered necessary to hold. On the Burma side Haka is the only new post, the Chins having been so completely cowed, that no great show of military strength is required to keep them in order. On the Chittagong and Cachar side the outposts of Fort Tredegar and Aijal, with their supports at Lungleh and Changsil respectively, furnish evidence to the central and northern Lushai tribes that their independence is coming to an end. Only about one thousand troops and frontier police have been left behind, now that the joint expedition has come to a close; and the political relations with the Chin and Lushai Chiefs have been placed on such a satisfactory footing that it is unlikely any serious disturbances will occur in the neighbourhood of the posts. Although Lienpunga and Vantura are at large they have not shown any signs of hostility, and the Northern Lushais, who were expected to give most trouble, have remained quietly in their villages. They must be aware that the bulk of the expeditionary force have returned to India, but no raids on any part of the frontier have been attempted, and there is a greater feeling of security along the border line from Cachar to Arakan than has been known for many years. In dealing with savage tribes there is always the danger that when direct pressure is removed from them they at once forget the engagements into which they have entered, but so far as can be judged both Lushais and Chins seem disposed to fulfil their obligations. The clemency with which they have been treated throughout has no doubt had a marked influence in confirming many of the Chiefs in their attitude of friendliness. Where punishment has had to be inflicted care has been taken to limit its scope to actual offenders, and thus no widespread feeling of distrust and hatred has been aroused among the tribesmen generally. Had the expedition been carried out on the old frontier plan of sweeping through hills and destroying villages indiscriminately, the seeds of much future trouble would have been sown, and the rapid pacification of the country have been indefinitely delayed. As it is, we may calculate upon the whole of the tribal Chiefs being brought well under control during the next cold season, and that without any further display of force on a large scale.—Pioneer.

THE HOT WEATHER IN INDIA.

Sir Charles Dilke in his Problems of Greater Britain has some characteristic remarks to make about the impressions which English tourists receive of India as they see it in the cold weather, when "the fields are green, the towns a garden, and the air in the soft sunshine the most balmy that can be found." As he truly says, they can take back with them but little notion of the real terrors of an Indian life, and he advises those who would judge for themselves of one of the greatest difficulties of Indian rule to follow the example of Professor Wallace and visit the country between March and November. They will then see how impossible it is to colonise India with Europeans. They are promised some consolations, however, though they will find the plains a fiery furnace whose heat is only tempered by the rains. "In the hot weather," writes Sir Charles in his picturesque way, "there are delights which make the joy of travellers, but which have a different aspect to those who are condemned to dwell in the plains unceasingly. Dawn is beautiful, and sunrise with its flecks of scarlet, and at night the Eastern russet moon rising from the smoking plains, heavy with their perpetual dust until it becomes silver as it bathes them in its light and extinguishes the starlight from overhead; but from sunrise until the hour when the brick-red sun sets in a black strip of sky there is nothing before even travellers except the deadly monotony of the long Indian hot-weather day." It was "Pagett, M.P.," who spoke of the heat of India as the "Asian Solar Myth," but who learned to change his opinion of the climate after a summer in the plains, and fled terror-stricken back to England, not railing against officials being overpaid, but "seeming to think it a wonder that anyone ever stayed." We shall be well content if Sir Charles Dilke's sketch of the "delights" of the plains will only tempt a few of our cold-weather visitors to remain to witness the scarlet-flecked sunrise of a June morning, and the beautiful effect of the Eastern moonlight on the perpetual dust—with the thermometer 100° at midnight. They will then, perhaps, understand the conditions under which work is done by English officials in a tropical climate.—Pioneer.

POSTAL REDUCTION.

The question of reducing the postage rate between India and England is by no means as simple a one as might at first sight be supposed. Hitherto the charge of 5d. on each letter has been divided into several small sums, each of which has been carefully allotted to defray a separate charge. One penny, for instance, has been taken by both India and England to be credited to their inland postage, three halfpence have been allowed for the mail steamer, and the remaining penny and a-half has been set aside to defray the expenses of the special mail train across the Continent. Recently, however, this latter charge has been reduced to a penny, and the sum saved by the reduction has enabled the Postal authorities to show a decrease of some £10,000 in the annual forfeit which they have had to pay the ocean mail steamers. Even now the sum paid is £40,000, which seems a large one for the Postal Department to hand over as forfeit to the P. and O. and British Indian Steamship Companies. The proposed reduction means, as we before stated, a serious loss to the Indian Government. In the course of a year about three million letters are sent home from India, and, calculating on this basis, and assuming that two annas are equal to 2½d., the loss would be about 4½ lakhs; while assuming that 2½ annas are equal to 2½d., the loss would still mean one of about 3½ lakhs. Of course there will be a certain increase in the number of letters which will be posted between the two countries in consequence of the reduced postage, but this is not likely to affect India in as large a degree as it will the Colonies. In the first place, the majority of Europeans in this country may be called well off, and the reduction will mean to them a comparatively small saving; and in the second place, any increase in the number of letters sent home is certain to be a slow and gradual one. In Australia, on the other hand, the population which corresponds regularly with home is a very large one, and being comparatively poorer than that of India, the reduction in the postage is bound to speedily lead to increased correspondence. So far, however, the information from England with reference to the proposed change has been mainly received by telegraph, and until the usual despatches are received from the Secretary of State and the matter has been fully considered here, it is unlikely than any definite action will be taken by the Government of India.—Englishman.

Miscellaneous.

At the commencement of the present century, according to a Madras paper, the number of Catholics in India was 475,000; whereas two years ago, the members of the Church had increased to 1,675,000, giving an increase of 800,000, or on an average, nearly 9,000 Christians a year, and now it is probable that an accurate census would show not less than two millions. Taking all drawbacks into consideration our contemporary thinks "this is not only satisfactory, but proves beyond a doubt, that as far as the Catholic Missions are concerned, the preaching of the Gospel has produced fruits which, humanly speaking, bear more than a fair proportion to the means employed."

CAPTAIN CUTHBERTSON'S death from cholera at the United Service Club on May 5th was a very sad affair. The deceased was taken with illness at 3 A.M., but rallied so successfully during the following afternoon that it was considered unnecessary to postpone the Ladies' Dinner, for which invitations had been issued—the fair guests consequently arrived at eight o'clock. Towards the end of the dinner, word was brought that the patient had had a sudden relapse, which ill news, both from the nature of the sickness and the consternation that such an announcement would have created, was kept more or less a secret amongst the gentlemen. Quite unconscious of the position of affairs, the ladies clamoured for a song, and called upon a gallant Colonel for one of a comic strain. It was a trying ordeal for the singer, who fulfilled his task with a grateful countenance and in very hushed tones. The ladies, however, suspected nothing, and the strains certainly went no further than the precincts of the room. It was a great relief when the guests had departed, unconscious of what had happened and unalarmed.

THE LEPROSY BILL.—The Rast Goftar has the following:—It is stated that there is no likelihood of the Leper Bill being proceeded with by the Government of India next cold weather. The hope was generally expressed on the death of Father Damien that it would awake the Government to the necessity of strict segregation for the lepers in India, which at present is the chosen home of leprosy. The Indian authorities did show some signs of activity, and it was considered to be a matter of absolute certainty that a measure embodying the principle of segregation would be carried through the Supreme Legislative Council. But the Government are now going to sleep over the Bill—at all events, until they have obtained "complete proof" of the contagiousness of this cruel disease from the medical authorities, both in this country and in England. Opinion will continue to be divided on the contagiousness of leprosy, and the Government will have, perhaps, little difficulty in persuading themselves that they have not obtained the complete proof which would have justified any action on their part. We think that segregation should be enforced as a remedial measure, irrespective of the question of contagiousness; because, although there is a difference of opinion on this point, it is pretty generally allowed even by medical men like Sir George Birdwood, who do not believe that the disease is contagious, that strict segregation is necessary to arrest the spread of leprosy and eventually to stamp it out. Sir George once gave a very bold proof of his conviction that leprosy was non-contagious by quaffing a goblet of sherbet prepared by a Mahomedan gentleman's servant whose hands and fingers bore the loathsome taint upon them. Yet he emphatically declares that segregation is the one measure necessary to prevent the multiplication of lepers. It was this measure that exterminated the disease which was so rampant in the Middle Ages in Europe, and we fear the Government of India will incur a fearful responsibility by refusing to pass this healing measure, under the pretext of a difference of opinion as to the contagiousness of leprosy which has nothing more than an academical interest, so far as the action which it is their duty to take is concerned.

A GHORAWALLA has been killed in a scuffle between seven soldiers of the Worcestershire Regiment and several Natives in a billiard room near the Cantonment Magistrate's Office, at Poona, the cause being an assault by Private Foley on a Mahomedan named Abdul Hoossein. In the struggle Private Banner is said to have struck the ghorawalla on the head with a pole. Four of the soldiers were arrested, but Privates Banner and Foley escaped. Privates Banner, Foley, and Edwards were arrested by the Poona police on May 16th, and placed before the Cantonment Magistrate, charged with culpable homicide, not amounting to murder, and abetment. The case was postponed for further police inquiry. The other soldiers who were arrested in connection with the tragedy have been released, they having no concern in the affair.

THE following is taken from the Asian:—"There is a prospect of another almost obsolete class of pony again becoming popular. There seems good reason to believe that his Excellency Sir Frederick Roberts is giving serious attention to the circumstance of the numerous fatalities that have resulted from polo. It seems to be an accepted opinion that the size, and, necessarily, the uncontrollableness of ponies, is mainly accountable for these disasters. Rumour points to the possibility of pressure being brought to bear on regimental polo clubs to fix a lower standard of height for their polo ponies. We are sure that all right-minded people will approve and endorse this by no means untimely interference; with a diminished height of ponies a far greater amount of enjoyment will be derivable from polo. It is to polo that we are indebted for the raising of the height of ponies from its old recognised standard of 13-2 to what it is now. The polo tournament committees raised the height to 13-3, and the Race Rules had it at 13-2. The famous clause in the earlier Civil Service Cup races framed in view to exclude Rex from running in the race invoked the prospects of the race one season in such confusion that the Calcutta Turf Club had to run to the rescue and legalise the 13-3 height by putting the limit at 14 hands. Once the polo pony height is reduced by G.O.C.C., the Calcutta Turf Club will doubtless follow the initiative and restore matters in statu quo ante.

THE regulations for the Volunteer Reserve have not, says the Civil and Military Gazette, made it quite clear whether the wearing of uniform by the reservists is optional or obligatory, and whether attendance at drill is a sine qua non to secure a capitulation grant. It has, therefore, been ruled by authority that it is optional with a reserve corps or company to adopt a uniform; but if one is adopted, the reservist must appear in uniform when he turns out for parade. On the other point it has been decided that where facilities exist, the reservist must attend seven drills in the year besides firing the prescribed annual course of musketry to earn the capitulation grant. Where facilities do not exist, i.e., at remote places where drill cannot possibly be pursued, attendance at parade is not necessary for the grant. But in any case the musketry course is.

AN effort is being made to raise subscriptions for a memorial to Colonel Wise, late Commissioner of Police in Bombay. Colonel Wise was not very long in Bombay itself, but, says a local paper, none who came in contact with him could fail to recognise his sterling qualities, both as an officer and as a man. "Though a strict disciplinarian, his consideration and courtesy towards his subordinates and all who had to meet him on business formed not the least estimable feature in his character, and we trust that the movement to raise a memorial will be successful."

A MAHOMEDAN and a Parsee are being tried at Rangoon on a charge of abducting a girl, fifteen years of age, named Julia Sirco, the daughter of a Frenchman by a Japanese woman. The part the Parsee is alleged to have taken in the affair is that of interpreter between Julia and her admirer, Ebrahim, and assistant to the latter in carrying the girl off. After she had been missing for three days, she was found by the police and her father with Ebrahim in a house in Kemendino. The girl declares that she was carried off forcibly against her will.

FORGERIES OF CURRENCY NOTES.—Numerous examples of forged currency notes have been recently discovered in circulation in various parts of Northern India, but the salutary action of the executive and judicials will, it is hoped, result in the extinction, at any rate for the present, of this description of crime. In two instances men have been just dealt with by the Allahabad High Court. One Chidambi Lal was arrested for passing forged notes for Rs. 500 at Cawnpore; and another, named Thakur Das, was charged with a cognate offence at Mainpuri. It is extraordinary that the culprits should have succeeded in passing the notes, or that they should have even tendered them without immediate detection, for the forgery was palpable. The notes appear to have been prepared by hand, and though that portion which is written in Hindi characters is fairly imitated, the English figures and the signature above all show their untruth on the face of them. It can only be conceived that the shrewd banias who took the notes were misled by the vernacular characters. The Sessions Judge of Cawnpore sentenced Chidambi Lal to transportation for life, but Mr. Justice Brodhurst and Mr. Justice Mahmood reduced that sentence to one of ten years' rigorous imprisonment. Thakur Das' sentence of fourteen years' rigorous imprisonment was confirmed by the same learned Judges. The case for the Crown was conducted by the Public Prosecutor.—Pioneer.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The bird's-eye views of the chief thoroughfares are a new feature of streetography, and far more useful than maps. Altogether, it is a most valuable handbook to the metropolis."—GRAPHIC.

"Very extensive in its information and interesting in its details—as a text-book for explanation and as a historical book of reference—it will be found most useful and entertaining."—DAILY NEWS.

"An admirable guide, full of information. The bird's-eye views are very interesting. They often give even those who are familiar with London a new idea of the relation of localities."—ILLUSTRATED SPORTING AND DRAMATIC NEWS.

"In addition to an admirably-arranged and vivaciously-written description of all the places and sites of interest in London, interspersed with numerous historical notes and details, the guide contains a feature which is absolutely unique in a series of eighteen bird's-eye views of the principal thoroughfares and the buildings of importance which abut upon them. It is unquestionably one of the most serviceable of the works issued for the behoof of visitors to the metropolis."—SCOTSMAN.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

BROAD ARROW

AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

Passengers leaving England receive the personal attention of MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., or their representatives.

Passengers Homeward are received on arrival at the various docks by the representatives of MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., and especial attention is paid to Ladies, Children, and Invalids.

MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO.'s clerks meet the steamers of the P. and O. and other Lines, on arrival at Plymouth, Gravesend, and the Dock, to receive instructions and render such assistance as passengers may require.

Passengers' Baggage and Packages not immediately required may be stored in a dry Warehouse kept for that purpose, at a moderate rent, and facilities are afforded for examination when desired. Goods, Baggage, and Parcels of every description are received for despatch to all parts of the world, or cleared and forwarded to their destination, in accordance with instructions.

Forms of Declaration for Customs and insurance are furnished on application.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal, bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 30th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 28th May; and from Calcutta to the 27th May.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN EMPRESS'S birthday was celebrated throughout India on Saturday, May 24th.

LORD HARRIS left Mahableshwar in the first week of June, making a short tour in the districts and visiting Satara and other stations. He was to arrive in Poona early the month, when the season was to open.

THE HON. MR. STOKES, Senior Member of the Madras Council, is indisposed at Ootacamund.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS BAKER, K.C.B., commanding the Rawal Pindi District, has been granted ninety days' privilege leave.

COLONEL WARBURTON, C.S.I., Political Officer in charge of the Khyber, is proceeding on one of his summer trips to the hills about the Pass, going first to Tor Sappar. He will remain absent from Peshawur among the tribesmen until September.

MR. F. L. LATHAM has resigned his post as an Additional Member of the Bombay Council. Lord Harris has nominated Mr. J. Macpherson, now officiating for Mr. Latham as Advocate-General, to fill the vacancy.

MR. H. G. PEARSE, Judge of Agra, has been appointed special Judge to try the Jhunda dacoity cases at Meerut. The trial was to begin on June 16th.

MR. A. KEYSER's application to the Secretary of State to retire on a proportionate pension has been refused.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WOLSELEY will officiate in the command of the Burma District until October, when General R. C. Stewart, now on leave, will take up the appointment.

COLONEL W. F. GATACRE returns immediately to Mandalay to command that District during General Wolseley's absence. Lieutenant-Colonel E. R. Elles will act as Deputy Quartermaster-General at Army Headquarters.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SYMONS takes leave to England shortly, being succeeded in the Myingyan District by Colonel T. Graham, C.B., who lately commanded the Sikkim Field Force.

A DINNER was given on May 17th by the residents of Chittagong to Brigadier-General Tregear and his staff. The Commissioner, Mr. D. R. Lyall, C.S., presided.

NEWS has been received of an accident in Burma to Colonel Pole-Carew, lately Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief. He was out elephant-shooting in the Pegu jungles, and had just fired at one elephant in a herd when he was attacked by four others. One of these was a tusker, which made a prod at him; the tusk fortunately missed Colonel Pole-Carew's body, but went through his left arm. The animal then tossed him into a nullah, where he lay concealed from the view of the herd. It was a marvellous escape in every way. Colonel Carew's wound is only a flesh one, and he is doing very well.

A TELEGRAM from Pauk states that the operations in the Chinbok country have come to an end. The troops all along the western border of Upper Burma have now to wait patiently at their posts until next cold season comes round, when there will be a revival of activity in connection with further explorations in the hills held by Chins, Chinboks, and other tribes.

TRAFFIC on the Rangcon-Mandalay Railway has expanded so steadily that two passenger trains are to be run daily each way.

THE junction of the Southern Mahratta Railway with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway at Poona will soon be effected. The work is being rapidly pushed on by the former company's engineers.

AT a meeting of the Committee of the Simla Fine Arts Society it was decided to hold the annual exhibition about August 20th, the early date being chosen with a view to avoid clashing with Poona.

THE total number of Mahomedans in Upper India who have signed petitions against the Congress programme now amounts to nearly 40,000.

THE trial of the three Mahomedans charged with attempting to murder the Dewan of Cambay has ended in the conviction of two of the prisoners, who have been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment.

THE monsoon has not yet broken at Colombo, but the best reports show that the weather is in an unsettled condition on the south-west coast, and that general rain has fallen in the Malabar district and Mysore.

THE Chins are now reported to be very quiet, although occasional trouble is caused by the cutting of telegraph wires by budmashes.

THE 24th Gurkhas are suffering much from fever, caught during the Chin-Lushai Expedition.

CHOLERA has broken out at Amreli, claiming fifteen to twenty victims daily.

MISS ARBUTHNOT, daughter of the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army, was thrown from a horse in a collision, and suffered a fracture of a limb.

THREE soldiers of the Worcestershire Regiment have been committed to the Sessions charged with culpable homicide.

UMRA KHAN, of Jandol, has laid in stores of ammunition and provisions at Surbat Fort, and has sent a message to the Khan of Dir, informing him of his intention to renew the attack.

THE South Indian Steam Navigation Company is the name of a new company, composed entirely of Native gentlemen, for the purpose of establishing a line of steamers to trade on the coast of Southern India.

THE Royal Welsh Fusiliers have this year won the Commander-in-Chief's Musketry Prize.

THE influenza has entirely disappeared from Bombay, and the death-rate for the past two weeks is only about 19.5.

As the old belief still obtains that every Anglo-Indian who returns to England returns with a liver half or double its natural size, they are true friends of India who come forward to cure the unhappy sufferers. Amongst the former may be reckoned those who prescribe Dr. Soule's Hop Bitters—a tonic preparation said to be in much favour with medical men in prescribing for cases of debility from climatic or other causes. They are, it is said, adapted for the relief of acidity and ordinary forms of dyspepsia, while their diuretic effects render them of value in many kidney ailments. As a family medicine, Dr. Soule's Hop Bitters have acquired a high reputation; and as they contain nothing which can prove of an injurious nature, they may be safely employed to correct and cure many of the minor ailments and weaknesses to which life is subject.

NOTES.

THE Overland Mail, although it comes in very late this week, brings no late news. The telegraph has already anticipated anything of importance that there was to tell, and that has been little enough.

THE Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief, the Lords of the Council, and all the nobility, are at Simla, and the mountain is merry-making. The Birthday Levee was, we read, "numerously attended, the arrangements perfect, and the whole affair was over in an hour." This last statement may look as if it contained a "suspicion" of satisfaction, in which, perhaps, his Excellency had a share too; but it is satisfactory to learn that throughout the length and breadth of India the Queen-Empress's birthday was loyally and enthusiastically honoured by Natives and Europeans alike.

THOSE who cannot get to the hills in any of the Presidencies are content for the moment with their lot in the plains. Bombay boasts of its healthiness, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the weather; Madras seems equally satisfied, and Calcutta does not this week give us a single abusive editorial or paragraph against the Simla exodus. This shows that India is at peace—for the moment.

SOME sad news, however, comes from Madras. A serious accident has happened to the eldest daughter of the Commander-in-Chief. Miss Arbuthnot was riding on the new racecourse with another gentleman; and coming in the opposite direction was Mr. Heron Maxwell. The horses were all going at a gallop. The former pair endeavoured to let the latter's horse pass between, but instead of that it rushed against Miss Arbuthnot's horse with a fearful crash, and both the lady and Mr. Maxwell were thrown violently to the ground. When they were raised the lady was unconscious, and was removed. After recovering consciousness it was found that severe injuries had been sustained. The doctors were soon in attendance. Mr. Maxwell got concussion of the brain. Both the horses were severely injured. It is believed that Miss Arbuthnot's leg has been broken. Much sympathy is expressed for the lady, she being a universal favourite.

THE appointment of Sir William Lockhart as successor of Sir John McQueen in the command of the Punjab Frontier Force has given much satisfaction in India. One journal says:—"He has not the local experience of the Punjab frontier tribes possessed by his predecessor, but he is a brilliant officer, who has won success under many very different circumstances, and there is every reason to anticipate that he will prove a success on our North-west frontier, where the command of the local force is beset with many difficulties, and requires an officer of the very highest ability and courage," and this seems to be the general opinion.

TO-DAY'S Morning Post has the following, which may not be without interest to many of our military readers who may not see that "fashionable print":—"A correspondent in India, drawing attention to a recent paragraph in this paper, writes to say that, whereas the number of officers of the British Army serving in India is 2,495, and the number of officers of the Indian Army only 1,613, the total number of staff appointments held by British officers is only 60, as compared with 91 held by Indian officers. These figures are doubtless perfectly correct, and it is apparent from them that, including every kind of staff appointment, small as well as great, the officers of the Indian service get the larger number; but this fact has never been questioned. The statement to which objection is taken was to the effect that Indian officers were beginning to complain that "the bulk of the best staff appointments are given to officers of the line regiments serving in India for the time being." And what are the facts of the case? The three presidencies are commanded by British generals, whose military secretaries are all British officers, as are also those of the governors. A majority of the first-class commands also are held by British officers. Of the appointments held by officers of the rank of brigadier-general and upwards, twenty-one are held by British officers and fifteen by officers of the Indian service, and it is not until the rank of lieutenant-colonel is included in the calculation that the number of Indian officers at last begins to preponderate, the numbers including that rank and upwards being only forty-nine Indians to forty-four British. "The best staff appointments" are certainly those held by the general officers and the six military secretaries, and twenty-seven out of forty-two would generally be considered the "bulk" of the appointments.

YESTERDAY afternoon Lord Cross, Secretary of State for India, in the presence of a numerous company, unveiled at the India Office a bust of the late Sir Robert Montgomery, who gained distinction by thirty-six years' service in India, more especially as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab during six years immediately succeeding the Mutiny, and who died in December, 1887. The bust is of alabaster, and has been executed in what the relatives and friends of the deceased administrator regard as a truly lifelike manner by Mr. A. Bruce Joy. Lord Cross said that was not the time for him to enlarge upon the virtues of his late friend. The energy and nobility of his mind were matters of history, while the simplicity of his manner and the genial kindness of his heart endeared him to all who had to work either under or above him. Among those present were Sir Frederick Halliday (formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal), Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, General George Hutchinson, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., Mr. T. H. Thornton, C.S.I., &c. This we learn from a corner paragraph in one of the daily papers, but why was such an event made a hole-and-corner affair in the India Office? Surely the subject of the bust, his many friends, to say nothing of the sculptor, deserved a little more recognition, when the object was to honour the memory of Sir Robert Montgomery.

WE have not been admirers of Lord Reay's general policy in Bombay, but he is doing work to day in London which must be commended by Anglo-Indians of all opinions, in presiding at the meeting to be held at the Westminster Palace Hotel this afternoon, to make a public appeal for funds in aid of the extension of Indian female education. It is one of the best of causes, for no social progress can take place to any permanent extent in India until Indian women are raised in the social scale, too. Why does not the National Congress go in for such kind of reforms, instead of mouthing platitudes about political representation?

IN connection with our leader of to-day just as we are going to press the Madras Mail comes to hand with the following, which we gladly, in justice to Colonel Richmond, reproduce:—"We are glad to hear that there is absolutely no foundation for the statement made by the Civil and Military Gazette that Colonel Richmond, of the disbanded 33rd Regiment, had "in face of orders received" sold up the mess property of the 33rd Regiment. We are assured that Colonel Richmond had never even heard of any such orders until he arrived in Madras from Moulmein, via Port Blair; and that was a fortnight after the sale and distribution of the property. We have all along deprecated the action taken by the Government of India in this respect. Colonel Richmond, so far from acting in disobedience to any orders, simply acted, as he thought, according to precedent, and we repeat the hope which we have expressed once before that the matter may now be allowed by Government to drop. It is certain that whatever the Government may do it is now impossible for the Officers' Mess of the 33rd Regiment to recover their scattered property; and if the matter is referred to the home authorities, there is very little doubt that they will prefer to allow Colonel Richmond's action to remain good, rather than to probe a sore which is felt to be a personal one by every officer of the Madras Army."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 15.

The despatch from the Supreme to the Provincial Governments on the subject of police administration, noticed briefly last week, is attracting much attention. The Government has undertaken the difficult task of attempting to reform what is perhaps the most unsatisfactory of all Indian departments. The suggestions now put forward are the result of a careful inquiry extending over some years, and will be further examined by the provincial authorities. It is understood that the Bengal Government is about to appoint a special commission for the purpose, under the presidency of a civilian of high rank. A separate despatch addressed to the Bengal High Court points to the lenient sentences passed on habitual criminals as one cause of the inability of the police to cope with crime.

Baboo Amrita Lal Roy, editor of the anti-Congress newspaper Hope, has addressed a remarkable letter to the Indian Daily News. This is the gentleman whom Mr. Digby, secretary of the Congress party in England, described in a letter to the Times as the only Indian agitator who had been in correspondence with the Fenians. The Baboo now explains that when a youthful student at Calcutta he was carried away by Surendra Nath Banerji's eloquent speeches on India's wrongs, and with two other youths determined to visit America to learn practical mechanics, military engineering, and drill. The project, he says, was discussed at Banerji's residence. Nothing came of it, but two years later he went to America, and while there was sounded by some Irish-Americans as to the feeling of Indian patriots. He wrote to Banerji on the subject, but received no reply. He adds that he long ago repented of his youthful folly. Maturer judgment led him to disagree with many points in the Congress programme, and since he began to express that disagreement in his paper the threat of exposure has been constantly held over him.

The Simla Session of the Legislative Council opens on Thursday. It is believed the first measures introduced will be the Cattle Trespass and Indian Small Cause Court Bills. The latter continues to excite much hostile criticism. The Madras Mail asserts that the approval expressed last year by the local High Court and the Chamber of Commerce applied only to the principle extending Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and that the Bill as drafted contains very objectionable clauses.

On account of the state of the market the Bombay mill-owners some time ago resolved to close their mills eight days monthly. The operatives held a meeting and requested the owners to work six days weekly, as they feared the curtailment of time would diminish their wages. The owners have now replied that they are unable to cancel the resolution, but after three months they will close for one day in every seven, such day to be Sunday, unless a Native festival of greater interest to the majority of operatives intervenes.

The Government has sanctioned the recruitment in the Punjab of military policemen for service under the East Africa Company. It is understood that the services of Lieutenant Budd, Bombay Staff Corps, are to be lent to the company to command the recruits. It is stated that the Government has also sanctioned the purchase of arms for the force from the Indian Ordnance Department.

The official returns of foreign trade for last year show a large decrease in imports, but an increase in exports. The decrease is mainly due to the decline of importations from Karenni and Zimme, while the improvement is chiefly in the value of goods sent to Cabul and Cashmere.

Lahore papers state that fighting with varying fortune continues in the frontier State of Bajaur between the Khan of Dir and Umra Khan. About 60 men have been killed on each side. The Khan of Dir has sent his family and valuables to Swat for safety.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 14.

The result of the survey of the proposed line of railway to the Salween river to tap the Yunnan trade shows that only one route is practicable at reasonable expense. It runs from Mandalay in an easterly direction along the line of the old caravan route, through the territory of the Thebaw Tsawbwa, to the Salween river at Kunlon ferry. The length is about 300 miles, and the estimated cost 350 lakhs.

The report on violent crime for the first quarter of 1890 shows that the numbers of violent crimes in Upper Burma, during the last quarter of 1889 and the first quarter of 1890, were 206 and 192 respectively. In the same period cases of dacoities fell from 188 to 95, and murders by dacoits from 11 to 7.

Considerable discontent is felt at the decision that henceforward the Judgeship of Moulmein town is reserved for members of the Burma Commission. Moulmein is the sixth largest commercial port in the Indian Empire. The causes coming before the Court consist mainly of commercial cases, often involving large amounts and raising intricate questions of commercial law, which can only be satisfactorily decided by trained lawyers. For over twenty years the Judgeship has been held by barristers. There is no economy to be gained by the proposed change, which is peculiarly unadvisable in Burma, where the Civil Service is not divided into executive and judicial branches as in regulation provinces, and where many members of the Commission are military officers.

EVENTS IN INDIA.

(FROM "DAILY NEWS" CORRESPONDENT.)

CALCUTTA, SUNDAY NIGHT.

The inquiry into the administration of the criminal law shows that the jury system is unsuitable in India. The Native magistracy is weak, and the lower grades of the police underpaid. A proposal to institute secret police, to register suspected persons, and to authorise domiciliary visits, is likely to excite strong opposition.

The Bombay millowners have received a petition from their workmen to close the works on one day of the week only, instead of two, as at present. It has been resolved, after a short time, to close on one day in every seven. This day will be Sunday, unless a Native festival intervene.

Some Bombay opium shippers lately appealed for the reduction of the duty. Some of them have now retired from business, as it has become quite unprofitable.

Great scarcity exists in the Punjab, owing to the failure of the winter rains. The wheat export is greatly affected thereby.

Two hundred Punjabis are being recruited for the military police for East Africa.

It is stated that General Sir Frederick Roberts was offered the post of Adjutant-General some months since. He is said to have accepted the appointment.

Colonel Napier, of the Dragoon Guards, has been killed by a fall while pig-sticking.

It is reported that seven Natives have been killed by the fall of a house in Bombay.

Five Sepoys were also killed in a powder explosion at Pindi.

A DETACHMENT of one Native officer and fifty men of the 1st Belooch Regiment has been ordered to Panjghur, via Gwadur, in relief of a similar party on political duty there. As there is no telegraphic or postal communication with the place, the men have taken with them three weeks' rations and an advance of pay for three months.

THE Sixth Annual Report of the Directors of the New Oriental Bank Corporation, Limited, shows a satisfactory result of the bank's operations. After payment of working expenses, interest, income-tax, rebate, exchange on foreign assets, and making full provision for bad and doubtful debts, the net profit (including £22,511 12s. 11d. brought forward) amounts to £62,140 16s. 4d. An interim dividend of 6s. per share, being at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, for the half-year ended September 30th, 1889, was paid, free of income-tax, in January last, and the Board now recommend a further dividend of 6s. per share, being at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, also free of income-tax, for the half-year ended March 31st last, the same to be paid on July 16th. They also recommend that all dividends payable at the branches be paid free of local income-tax. The following figures show the steady increase in the business here and abroad since the commencement of the Bank:—

	Banking Assets.	Dividend Paid.
30th September, 1884	£102,000
31st October	742,000
30th November	1,086,000
31st December	1,480,000
31st March, 1885	2,383,000	5 per cent. per annum.
30th September	3,846,000	5 per cent. per annum.
31st March, 1886	4,963,000	5 per cent. per annum.
30th September	5,483,000	5 per cent. per annum.
31st March, 1887	6,231,000	6 per cent. per annum.
30th September	7,102,000	6 per cent. per annum.
31st March, 1888	8,177,000	6 per cent. per annum.
30th September	8,526,000	6 per cent. per annum.
31st March, 1889	9,496,000	6 per cent. per annum.
30th September	9,967,000	6 per cent. per annum.
31st March, 1890	10,573,000	6 per cent. per annum.

THE BANK OF BENGAL FRAUD.

(Statesman.)

Every day brings to light further particulars concerning the exploits and habits of Mr. Elias H. Solomon, the gentleman who has defrauded the Bank of Bengal. The Indian Mirror says that this accomplished swindler "is almost worshipped by the poorer portion of his community for his personal modesty, his well-regulated domestic life, a strict observance of the rites of his religion, but, above all, for his abounding charity!" This shrewd Hebrew is not singular in his hypocrisy; for, if we remember rightly, the Directors of the Glasgow Bank, whose unscrupulous speculations brought ruin and disaster on so many hundreds of households, were, certainly, so far as outward appearances went, exemplary Christians, who were looked upon by those among whom they worked and lived as "shining lights" and "pillars of the Church," practising all the virtues, especially charity, until at last the bubble burst and exposed their true characters. Although none of his community have ventured to avow any active sympathy for Mr. Solomon, there is reason to believe that, if Inspector Jacob had not been as smart as he was, the bird would have flown, and probably have never been heard of again. But, if the report which reaches us be true, Inspector Jacob has paid dearly for doing his duty. He has, we understand, been ostracised from Hebrew society, and his pursuers have vowed to wreak their vengeance on him, and it is said that, were he to die, they would refuse him a Jewish burial. All sorts of rumours are afloat as to the speculative character of Solomon. It is said that he had many irons in the fire; and besides speculating in Government paper and opium, it was his wont to dabble heavily in jute and other shares, besides importing piece-goods from Manchester, and dealing in anything which was calculated to yield large profits at short returns. The Mirror has "heard people say that Solomon, who is credited with ferreting out the Budget secrets, was on excellent terms with some subordinate or other in the Board of Revenue, and not only Solomon, but other Jews and Marwaris also." This, our contemporary says, "is doubtless a mere trick of fancy; but it is not well that such rumours should be afloat;" and our contemporary asks the Government not to begin and end only with the prosecution of Solomon, but to carry the inquiry further till the whole truth is laid bare. Solomon's case has made an impression on the public mind, unparalleled in recent times, and the excitement over it increases every day, and must continue to do so until the whole truth of the matter is officially made known. It is also reported that Solomon has obtained loans from time to time on opium passes, and that if the bank's action in the present instance had not been so precipitate, Solomon would have been able to repay the last loans, large as they were. If there is any truth in this report, how is it that the forgeries were not at once detected? Even the very forms of the passes are alleged not to have come from the office of the Board of Revenue, and that makes the fact of the success of the fraud still more strange. Since the Government has undertaken to prosecute Solomon, it is incumbent upon it to sift the matter to the very bottom. The Board of Revenue must explain if real passes did not go out of its office to enable Solomon to copy them for his purposes. The public would like to have this and other equally important questions answered.

The Pioneer writes:—Mr. Solomon, the gentleman who has got himself into trouble with the Bank of Bengal, appears to be the identical person who so disturbed the public mind at the time of the issue of the Budget, by the extent of his acquaintance with the intentions of the Government, both as to the imposition of the spirit duty and as to the non-issue of a rupee loan. In the latter case it seems quite as probable that Mr. Solomon acted upon a shrewd estimate of the general financial position by putting this and that together as that he was in receipt of any specific information. As to the spirit duty, the clue had leaked out some time before through one of the Local Governments consulted. But cleverness is often short-sighted. Not being a lawyer Mr. Solomon apparently overlooked a provision which deprived him of the advantage he had calculated upon in making a large purchase of spirits on the eve of the enhancement of the duty. The Customs Tariff Bill, introduced last year in connection with the salt duty, provides that in case of transactions taking place within one month of the enhancement of duty the buyer has to make good the difference to the seller, thus obliterating the profit of such speculations. Mr. Solomon could only operate in spirits a short time before the duty was raised, and hence he overreached himself. As to his dealings in Government paper it is well known that there were other influences abroad which prevented Sir David Barbour's announcement about the loan bringing about the rapid rise of price that might prima facie have been reckoned upon. The rumour current in Calcutta that Mr. Solomon cleared fifty-four lakhs is, of course, an absurd exaggeration. The fact is, that he can have made little over his speculation, as the margin of profit was small, and his operations only extended to fourteen lakhs.

The Indian Mirror again refers to the recent frauds in the Bank of Bengal, and after quoting from the Statesman and Financial Review, whose remarks in effect supported what our contemporary had written on the subject, it says:—"For our part, we have much respect for, and every confidence in, Mr. Westland, the present officiating secretary to the Bank. We do not think that the bank's losses have arisen at all through his carelessness or negligence. On the contrary, we are inclined to think—and we speak under correction—the losses may be attributed to the management of Mr. Cruikshank. It is somewhat curious that Mr. Cruikshank, the secretary, and Mr. Biss, the accountant, should have availed themselves of leave of absence from the country a very short time before the public exposure of Mr. Solomon's frauds." It traces these heavy losses to the Bank of Bengal indirectly to the misplaced zeal of Mr. Hardie, a late secretary of the bank. In his zeal for the efficiency of the staff of the bank Mr. Hardie abolished the post of khazanchi, a position of honour and trust, held till then by Indian gentlemen of well-known respectability. He also sent a number of Indian clerks adrift, and introduced a large European element in the bank. The Mirror condemns the abolition of the post of khazanchi, for had it been retained, the frauds perpetrated by Solomon would not have occurred. It says that if the system of the management of the Bank of Bengal is to be revised the post of khazanchi should be restored. "For its own sake," concludes our contemporary, "the Bank of Bengal should elect an Indian director without delay."

THE EURASIAN COLONY.

(Times of India.)

Lord Connemara has been visiting the Eurasian settlements of Whitefield and Sausmond, on the tableland of Mysore, and after looking with much interest into this almost unique experiment, his Excellency has arrived at the conclusion that the present aid which is given to education in these colonies by the Madras Government may be continued, and even extended, should occasion require, and that the colonies are worthy of support and encouragement, inasmuch as they afford an opportunity to European or East Indian pensioners of obtaining land on favourable terms in a village where they can cultivate it amongst their fellow-countrymen. Lord Connemara thinks, however, that it is most improbable that any but capitalists can work these holdings at a profit; that such profits are to be expected chiefly from fruit-growing, arboriculture, and the like pursuits, while in respect of crops it is most improbable that these settlers will ever be able to compete with ordinary native ryots; that there is little or no hope that the children of these settlers will ever make their living on these lands in the absence of capital such as their fathers possessed; and, finally, that the idea of a self-contained European and Eurasian village, possessing its own artisans, tradesmen, and agriculturists, independent of all outside help, must be abandoned as altogether chimerical. It is rather difficult to reconcile Lord Connemara's first conclusion with his last, but on one point there can be no doubt, and that is that his Excellency's Private Secretary, Mr. J. D. Rees, has written a most interesting account of the visit, and from his details one may easily form one's own conclusions. The main fact which stands out from the report is that in no case does the cultivation of the land appear to have paid the cultivators, though it seems "almost certain" that orchards and casuarina groves in the lowlying and better lands will eventually pay. With capital, however, no doubt a good deal may be accomplished. One of the settlers, Sergeant Crooks, had planted in his orchard graft mangoes, which were doing well, apples, oranges, limes, citrons, peaches, plums, guavas, figs, loquats, cherries, lichees, custard apples, pears, pine apples, and pomegranates. He had also a flourishing casuarina plantation. A jeweller from Bangalore also had, like Sergeant Crooks, planted a very promising orchard in lowlying ground. Both these settlers are comparative capitalists, and, just as no settler can do any good at Whitefield without capital, so do those who have most capital occupy the best land and do most good with it. In the neighbouring town of Bangalore, with 160,000 inhabitants, and in the prosperous gold fields of Kolar, Whitefield and Sausmond possess unfailing markets for more than all the fuel they can raise. Already has the growing output of the Mysore, Ooregum, Nundidroog, Bolaghaut, and other mines produced a rise in the local price of fuel, which offers an additional inducement to neighbouring landholders to enter into what previously was a sufficiently profitable investment. In concluding his eminently readable notes of the tour, Mr. Rees observes that the case is one for kindly criticism and a helping hand, which Lord Connemara is prepared to give, and whether the existence of these colonies be or be not prolonged to adolescence and old age, useful lessons may be learnt by observing their success or failure, and evidence collected which cannot but be of use to a Government which has set before it the solution of the Eurasian problem, and the provision of a diversity of occupations for a clientèle, which "at present for the most part cannot or will not dig, which of begging should be brought to be ashamed." For ourselves, as we have already stated in these columns, we do not feel very sanguine about the success of the experiment. All it has proved so far is that, if a man has capital, he will do pretty well, and if he has none he won't do at all; and it scarcely needed a Eurasian colony to establish that. If the settlements are not to benefit poor Eurasians, their raison-d'être seems to us to have ceased to exist.

PRICES IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette).

The industry of the Department of Finance and Commerce in collecting and arranging the data of economical problems relating to India seems inexhaustible. The latest contribution to Indian economy is in the form of a Blue-book upon prices and wages; and although upon opening it will be found to present to the eye a bewildering mass of figures, even a small and superficial examination yields more than one valuable conclusion nearly affecting the happiness and welfare of the Indian populations. Take the rice crop in Burma; the fluctuations in price are remarkably insignificant, for the reason chiefly that the crop is the most certain in, perhaps, the whole world, owing to climatic conditions that may be confidently expected to recur; and herein we find one great cause of the lightheartedness and easy-going character of the Burman. From time immemorial the rice crop in Burma has not been known to fail: there are no landlords to enhance the rent the moment prices rise; and the result is that the Burman has only to tickle the ground, wait for the monsoon and the melting snows to lay the earth under water, and reap a harvest that secures him from want, and leaves him with a surplus for gaming and the bejewelment of his womenkind. Another fact brought into prominence by the figures is the influence of famine on prices. Bygone famines affected not only the particular province in which the famine operated, but the other provinces as well. In the Madras famine of 1877 the prices of jowar and gram (for examples) rose, in the case of jowar, from 27 seers the rupee to 9 seers the rupee; and in the case of gram, from 20 seers to 10 and 11. The North-West and Bombay were also affected. In the North-West the price of jowar rose from 23 seers to 14 for the rupee, and gram from 23 to 16 and 19 seers: in Bombay jowar rose from 19·8 to 9·7 and 10·8; and gram from 15·9 to 7·7 and 9·7. A third feature to be noticed is the effect the development of communication by road and rail has had in so linking the provinces together, that whatever the state of the harvest in one, the rise or fall in prices is much more general and much more equal than in the days when each province was isolated from its neighbour. It is, we venture to think, lessons of this sort that reports like the one now dealt with ought to be made, to teach, and they should be conveyed directly by experts in the science of economics, not left to the sometimes uncertain exposition of the newspapers.

LORD REAY'S GUARANTEE.

(Times of India.)

Who is really responsible for the guarantee to the peccant Mamludars? That is a question worth asking, now that the protests of Mr. Propert, Mr. Keyser and others have been given to the world. In a very à propos contribution "Historical Remembrancer" writes:—Now that some political capital is being made out of Lord Reay's offer to the confessing Mamludars that they should keep their judicial powers, it seems desirable, as a matter of constitutional history, to have an official memoir drawn up, showing what actually happened from beginning to end. There are most extraordinary resemblances to the history of the illegal declaration about offices issued by James II. which the Seven Bishops refused to act upon. The objection taken by the Justices of the High Court was exactly the same, namely, that Lord Reay's declaration was contrary to Act of Parliament. As among the Bishops, so among the Judges, there was not united action; some did not think it necessary to remonstrate. The supporters of James II. thought the Seven Bishops very aggravating in letting their famous protest get to the Press. The keyword used by Lord Reay's Government in their reply to the Judges was "extra-judicial." This very same word was applied to the Bishops by the Attorney-General when prosecuting them for seditious libel; he made out that they were criminal and punishable for attacking the King, being mere busybodies. The Judges of the High Court used exactly the same defence, saying they were acting in their duty of superintending the inferior Courts: the phraseology is almost the same. The Judges were luckier than the Bishops, as they were not sent to the Tower or prosecuted in their own Court. The Secretary of State and the Viceroy adopted their views. Against the illegal Declaration made by James II. led directly to his abdication: while Lord Reay told the assembled natives at the Apollo Bunder that he had "tendered his resignation" to Lord Cross in connection with what everyone supposed to be the Mamludars' indemnity. The late Governor may justly remark of all this—quorum pars magna fui. But there is another Virgilian quotation—Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas: and this is applicable to both the illegal declarations about retention of offices. Lord Reay has departed without relieving the general curiosity as to what particular person invited him to offer the indemnity. None of the official papers, not even Sir Raymond West's elaborate minute, enable the historian to answer this question. It is known that the Crown lawyers were not consulted beforehand. But whether the suggestion of the famous document was the Hon. Mr. Naylor or Mr. Gurnamney, or Mr. Pendse or Mr. Bhimbhai, is as much a matter of conjecture as what song the Sirens sang, or what name Achilles used when he hid himself among women. Unless the official annalist clears up the point now it may be left to the future historian as much as the illegal order issued to the Bishops, about which Sir James Mackintosh writes—"Who was the adviser of this order which has acquired such importance has not yet been ascertained. It was publicly disavowed by Sunderland, but at a time which would have left no value to his declaration. It now appears that he and other counsellors disavowed it at the time, and they seem to have been believed by keen and watchful observers, though it was then rumoured that Petre the Jesuit had also disavowed this false advice, the concurrent testimony of all contemporary historians ascribe it to him." On the other hand, Lingard suggests that the illegal action may have been suggested by some secret enemy of James II., cunning and irresponsible, anxious to ruin him. Great events like these strike those that make them; and it would be a graceful concluding act if Lord Reay from his place in Parliament or in a leisurely memoir would reveal the authorship of the document which marks a constitutional conflict, and is indeed the principal incident of his Indian career.

THE SIKHS OF TO-DAY.

(Pioneer.)

The Sikhs have hitherto been looked upon as almost exclusively a martial race, furnishing recruits of splendid physique and undoubted courage to the Native Army and sending out hundreds of men of a similar stamp for military police duty in the further East. Now it is quite true that the glories of traditions of the Khalsa, when every adult was supposed to be trained to arms, still live in many a village in the Punjab, and families can be found that for many generations have been faithful to the teachings of Guru Govind Singh. But of late years it has become evident to those who have interested themselves in the fortunes of the race as a whole that the old warlike spirit is dying out, that the taking of the pahol or oath of initiation—the "baptism of the sword" as it has been termed—is no longer rigidly observed, and that the Sikhs of to-day are gradually losing those characteristic qualities which gave to their forefathers dominion over a wide stretch of country.

But there is another side to the question of the changes at work amongst them which is forcing itself upon public notice. Like the Muhammadans in Bengal they have been slow to avail themselves of the benefits of that Western education which the more effeminate but more intelligent of the Hindu races have so eagerly seized upon. The result is that they now find themselves handicapped in the struggle for advancement to such offices of the State as are open to them, and that their old prestige is rapidly disappearing. Their leaders have been content in the past to preach patience and to exhort their followers to be true to their creed—excellent precepts no doubt in their way, but still not quite meeting the circumstances of the case. Within the last year or two they have, however, awakened to a sense of their responsibility, their petitions to Government for help being the first signs of the change which has come over them. Their appeals were treated with all due consideration, but at the same time they were frankly told that they must justify any assistance which might be given them by some definite action on their own part. The Khalsa Division, which may be regarded as really speaking in the name of the Sikhs collectively, has accordingly bestirred itself, and a movement has been set on foot which it is hoped will materially benefit the whole community. This is the foundation of a Central Khalsa College, on the lines of the Mohammedan Anglo Oriental College at Aligarh, worked in connection with a system of schools in the outlying districts.

The "appeal" which was adopted some time ago at the meeting of the Committee which has undertaken to carry out his work is now being widely circulated, and it is remarkable in many ways as showing how widespread is the alarm among the spiritual leaders of the Sikhs. Here we have, at least, a clear confession of the present state of feeling among the Sikhs, though, perhaps, the language employed is more emotional than the case requires. But it may be admitted that the race can only continue to exist, separately and distinctly, so long as the pure tenets of Sikhism are upheld. If the growing laxity in connection with religious observances is not checked, more particularly now that the "baptism of the sword" is falling into disuse, the Sikhs will insensibly lapse into Hinduism, save at a few populous centres, where the power of the priesthood will still be strong enough to keep together a number of orthodox worshippers. The proposal to found a College, which shall comprise the advantages of Western teaching with instruction in the creed of the Gurus, is one which has much to commend it to the consideration not only of the Sikh community, but to all who desire to see this fine race maintain its individuality. The Government have lately shown themselves anxious to foster the martial spirit of the community by measures which shall open a military career to the young sardars, and they are certain to view with approval the steps taken by the Khalsa Diwan to bring education within the reach of all classes.

FURLOUGH TO N.C.O'S. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

We have complained that the warning recently issued by the Secretary of State on the subject of passages in Indian troopships for non-commissioned officers proceeding to England on furlough is likely to curtail the number of furloughs which will in future be granted; and we have received some confirmation of our view that this restriction will have bad results. At present there is a difficulty in inducing such non-commissioned officers to re-engage as have no immediate prospect of rising beyond the rank of ordinary platoon sergeant; while even if they do re-engage, it is possible that any difficulty about a furlough to England will result in a very large proportion of non-commissioned officers electing to go home to the other battalion after eight years' continuous service in India. More than one non-commissioned officer, after seeing our remarks, has written to us to say that it would be so in his case. Now, while there may be, and probably are, in every battalion a certain percentage of sergeants whom no colonel would be very sorry to lose, there are, on the other hand, a number of excellent seasoned non-commissioned officers who are just the men who should be with a battalion on foreign service, because having served a number of years in India, they must of necessity be better guides as regards manner of life and preservation of health in this country than the young and inexperienced sergeants who accompany drafts to India. No better regulation was ever devised to maintain a contented tone among the non-commissioned ranks of the British army in India than that by which Sir Frederick Roberts made it possible for a sergeant to take a trip to England and return to this country to complete his service; but if the Secretary of State proposes to limit the indulgence to any very great extent, or shows an inclination to get out of the bargain, then the difficulties—already sufficiently great—of inducing sergeants to re-engage and continue serving in India will be very largely increased.

BENGAL. (May 27.)

THE Port Officer, Calcutta, received a telegram on the 19th inst. from the Port Officer of Chandbally that the ship Soudan, from Liverpool with salt, is ashore on the Palmyra reef, bearing east by south and half south from north-east point of Shorts Island. It was near here that the Eusemere was lost. A telegram received at the Port Office, Calcutta, on the 20th states that the vessel floated off all right on Monday afternoon.

THE Englishman fears that the experiment with incinerators in Calcutta for the destruction of street refuse is not as successful as was expected. At the present season the sweepings are in the best condition for burning, and yet they do not burn readily, while the consumption involves a disproportionate expenditure on fuel. It is hoped that by making certain alterations in the furnaces they will do their work better.

THE third annual meeting of the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce was held on the 13th inst. The report stated that during the year the number of members had increased from fifty-five to sixty, and that the representations of the Chamber had been successful in eliciting some degree of attention from the Government and those in authority, though in several matters they were not treated with the courtesy they had a right to expect. Babu Chunder Lal Sinha was elected president for the ensuing year. Babu Sewbux Bogla asked the Chamber to take up the questions of income-tax and over-assessment. The assessment on the non-English speaking classes was, he said, arbitrary.

MADRAS. (May 28.)

ON the 19th inst. a most extraordinary and somewhat alarming spectacle was to be seen beneath the Napier Bridge, Madras, which crosses the mouth of the river Cooum. The iron girders immediately above the water's edge were simply covered with a writhing mass of water snakes to the number of several hundred, and they are doubtless still to be seen there. Why water-snakes should prefer the uncertain tenement of an iron bar to the element which is their usual habitat a contemporary is quite unable to say, unless it was that they were afraid of being poisoned by remaining in the "silvery Cooum."

THE arrangement which prevails in Madras with regard to State ball invitations seems a very sensible one. In this part of India, says the Morning Post of Allahabad, the occasion involves the employment of aides-de-camp for many days previous in sending out numberless formal invites, as well as worry and trouble to those concerned in despatching their formal replies. It also frequently means the accidental omission of some names, and thereby the creation of ill-feeling and disappointment in certain quarters. In Madras there is nothing of this kind. The Governor has, for example, just announced in the Gazette that there will be a State ball in honour of the Queen's birthday, adding to the same announcement that Lord Connamara "requests the honour of the company of all officers of Her Majesty's civil, naval, military, and ecclesiastical services, with the ladies of their families, at Government House, Ootacamund, on that occasion."

THE Hyderabad Government recently sanctioned the purchase of ten engines to meet the demands of the increasing traffic on the State Railway. The application for the engines was made some time in April last year, and the Minister, on the representation of the then Home Secretary, at once sanctioned the same subject to a formal reference to the official Director, Nawab Medhi Hassen, on some minor point. There was some delay in the disposal of the reference, and in consequence the Resident in October last had a Committee appointed to settle the matter. This Committee recommended the purchase of five engines at once and the rest later on. These latter have now been finally sanctioned. The delay caused has resulted in much indirect loss to the railway and given unnecessary trouble to its management. The cost of the engines will be about £20,000, but they will not be available under fifty-two weeks. In the meantime the railway will probably have to reject traffic or meet it by hiring engines from other railways, which will cost Rs. 3,000 or thereabouts. The price of engines have been enhanced considerably of late, and had a settlement been effected last year as to their purchase they could have been bought 30 per cent. cheaper.

WITH regard to the fraud on the Calcutta branch of the Chartered Bank, it appears that the warrant for Sharma Charan Sen's arrest should not be altogether a matter for surprise, for, so far back as the 14th ultimo, his supposed defalcations were the subject of a discussion at a general meeting of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, held at the Cannon Street Hotel in London, with Mr. William Patterson in the chair. The chairman, in the course of his speech, referred to a sum of £50,000 which it had been proposed to pass to the reserve. He remarked:—"I regret to inform you that this very day we have a telegram from Calcutta which leads us to believe that our chief native cashier there has committed large defalcations. We have only received a telegram, so that we are quite unable to say anything definite on the subject, but we have thought it right, instead of placing this £50,000 to our fixed reserve, to place it to a contingent reserve account. It has been the policy of this bank, throughout, to let the shareholders know everything, and we do so on this occasion, giving you all the information that we have on the subject. I will only say that this chief cashier has been with us for about fifteen years, and is a man very much respected in Calcutta. I cannot say anything more until we get further information by letter, but we have no reason to suppose that the sum I mention will not amply provide for any loss we can possibly sustain."

BOMBAY. (May 30.)

MR. S. L. BATCHELOR, C.S., is appointed Assistant Collector, Panch Mahals.

MR. A. SHORE has been confirmed in the appointment of Inspector of Steam Boilers and Prime Movers.

MR. R. KNIGHT, C.S., has been allowed an extension of leave on medical certificate for five months.

MR. J. R. HATHERLY, Executive Engineer, Second Grade, is allowed furlough for eighteen months from June 1st next.

HONORARY LIEUTENANT AND DEPUTY ASSISTANT COMMISSARY H. C. VAUTIN is appointed an (Extra) Assistant Engineer, Second Grade.

DURING the absence of Surgeon R. J. Baker, Surgeon J. Crimmin, V.C., acts as Obstetric Physician, Jamshedjee Jejeebhai Hospital.

MR. C. B. PRITCHARD, C.S., C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind, has been granted a further extension of five months' leave on medical certificate.

IN modification of a previous order, Mr. A. Cumine, C.S., is allowed furlough for one year, four months, and fifteen days, with effect from 5th June next.

THE services of Surgeon-Major K. A. Dalal, M.B., Indian Medical Department, have been placed at the disposal of Government for civil employ.

IT is announced that H. E. the Governor has accepted the resignation by the Honourable F. L. Latham, Advocate-General of Bombay, as an Additional Member of Council, and in his place Mr. J. Macpherson, B.A., barrister-at-law, Acting Advocate-General, Bombay, has been nominated.

THE erection of a new Jail and Workhouse will shortly be commenced on the Elphinstone-road, Parel, and it is notified in last week's Government Gazette that Government are about to take over for the purpose some 15,795 square yards of land in the vicinity.

MR. R. P. BRUNTON, Assessor and Collector of the Bombay Municipality, having obtained six months' leave of absence, Mr. W. Pearson, Assistant to the Municipal Commissioner, has been appointed to act for him. Mr. T. Glover, of the Health Department, will act in Mr. Pearson's place.

LAST week's Government Gazette contains rules, under section 12 of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Act, for ten Municipalities in the Khandeish Collectorate. The Municipalities are Kasoda, Nagardeola, Chalisgaon, Jamner, Shendurni, Pahnur, Nasirabad, Asoda, Bodwad, and Raver.

THE final report on the wheat crop in Berar for the season 1889-90 is as follows:—"Acreage under wheat 830,027 acres, being 11.9 per cent. less than last year. Decrease due to full yield and high selling rates of cotton. Estimated outturn from 8 to 13 annas.

THE final report on the linseed crop in Berar for the season 1889-90 is as follows:—"Acreage under linseed 249,236 acres, being 18.1 per cent. less than last year. Decrease due to season being favourable to kharif crop last year. Outturn estimated from 9 to 14 annas."

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season report for the past week:—Standing crops good. Harvesting of late crops completed except in parts of four districts. Preparations for next season's early crops progressing generally, and sowing commenced in Kurrachee and Belgaum. Fodder scarce in two talukas of Kurrachee and one of Hyderabad, Nassik, Poona, and Dharwar. Water scarce in four talukas of Nassik and one of Dharwar. Agricultural stock poor in four talukas of Nassik, two of Kurrachee, and one of Hyderabad.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

(May 28.)

THE annual Eton Dinner on the 4th proximo will be given this year by the Viceroy and not by the Commander-in-Chief, as has hitherto been the custom.

THE Thanesar Fair in the Umballa district, which was to have been held on the 17th proximo, the day on which the eclipse of the sun occurs, has been stopped by Government on sanitary grounds.

IT has been notified for the information of those concerned that the beacon situated at the Hajamri mouth of the "River Indus" is in a precarious state and liable to be swept away. The erection of a new beacon is in contemplation.

IT has now been announced that the twenty-third annual exhibition of the Simla Fine Arts Society will be opened about Aug. 20 next. Pictures are to be sent in by the 10th idem, and all who may be interested in the exhibition can obtain a prospectus by application to Colonel R. G. Woodthorpe, the honorary secretary.

A SERIES of no less than six dacoities has been perpetrated in the Shahjahanpur district by a gang of wandering criminal tribes, who are supposed to have come into the district from Sitapur. All the dacoities were committed within a few hours of one another, and cash to the amount of Rs. 300 and more, and other valuable property has been plundered. From Bareilly we hear that all the accused, save one, have been arrested by the police in the dacoity which took place some time ago in the house of a mukhtar. One of the accused has been admitted an approver, and the remaining five have been committed to the next Sessions. Two are men belonging to the 5th Bengal Cavalry at Lucknow, and were on leave at the time from their regiment.

BURMA.

(May 23.)

INTIMATION has been given to all Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners in Lower Burma that the Income-Tax Act having been in force since the 1st of April, 1888, it is necessary that a report on the working of the Act should be submitted at the close of each year.

THE Madras Times remarks:—Now that Dr. Sibthorpe has been virtually appointed Deputy Surgeon-General, Rangoon Sub District, Government has decided that the vacancy at Mandalay and Myingyan Districts shall be filled by senior medical officers till July next, when Dr. Farquhar retires. This arrangement, it is calculated, will avoid extra expense to the State and hardship to Dr. Farquhar or Dr. Roe, by moving one or the other to Burma for so short a period. Until their retirement in July or August, respectively, these officers will remain in their present appointments, and will not be in excess of the new organisation.

THE Rangoon Gymkhana Club gave a highly successful concert on Tuesday night in honour of General Gordon, who is shortly leaving Burma, and who has been president of the club for some time. After supper Bishop Strachan proposed General Gordon's health, enumerating his services and the great difficulties he and the civil authorities had had to contend with in Burma during the past few years. They were successfully encountered, and he thanked God their gallant guest was not retiring with shattered constitution, but in the full vigour of life. They would miss his martial form and winning smile so familiar to all in Burma, but he doubted not General Gordon's sword in the future as in the past would, if necessary, be placed with his matured experience at the service of the Queen. The toast was drunk with musical honours. General Gordon, in reply, said he came there four years ago an utterly unknown man. His kind reception from all in Burma made his command one of the pleasantest periods in the life of an old soldier. He would carry away to England the happiest recollections of his stay, and hoped to meet again there many of the kind friends he was leaving behind.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Four Years in Parliament with Hard Labour," by C. W. Radcliff Cooke (W. H. Allen and Co.). "Life and Sport in Southern India," by Col. Helier Drury (W. H. Allen and Co.). A PROPOSAL is put forward by a Calcutta paper for the erection of a Mercantile Exchange, where merchants, bankers, brokers, et hoc genus omne, may meet at the hour of "high change," for the better discussion of financial and commercial subjects and the position of trade. At present large firms are dependent upon brokers for a knowledge of the state of the market.

IN the competition for the Commander-in-Chief's musketry prizes this year the 7th Dragoon Guards, Umballa, head the list of British Cavalry with a score of 534 points; the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Lucknow, winning the Cup with 550 points. In the Native Army the winners are the Guides Cavalry, 518 points, and the 5th Bengal Light Infantry, 557. Havildar Lehna Singh, 3rd Sikhs, carries off the Magdala Gold Medal with a score of 63.

THE Madras Times understands that, when the idea was mentioned in Madras of levying income-tax on the profits made by the consignors who ship goods to India from other countries, Messrs. Walker and Co., of Madras, raised a point of some interest. This firm wanted to know whether, with regard to the levy of income-tax on profits made on goods consigned to them by their home constituents, losses made in one market or presidency would be deductible from profits made in another. Of course, the income-tax is an Imperial impost, and the Board of Revenue has ruled that losses sustained in any part of British India may be set off against profits made in any other part of British India. This will be some slight consolation to shippers, should the idea of imposing such a tax as is here referred to be enforced. For all the revenue likely to be derived from any such tax, the Government might as well decide at once to drop a very objectionable idea, and one totally opposed to the principles of fair trade and fair taxation.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY HONOURS.

Says the Rast Gofstar:—Those who expected a lavish bestowal of the Queen's Birthday honours, in consequence of the visit of Prince Albert Victor to India, are doomed to disappointment. The customary reward of knighthood, or a humbler honour, to men entrusted with the task of reading formal addresses of welcome to Royalty, has not been given to any of those who had the pleasure of performing this honourable function during the tour through India of the Queen's grandson, the future king of England. The honours list, so far as it goes, is open to little objection. But it is not free—it cannot be free—from the sin of omission. In Bombay we may mention some names which ought to have been rewarded some time since. We refrain from mentioning them, lest we should unconsciously omit from our list equally deserving names, if not better. Turning to the published list of honours we find several persons whom it is a pleasure to congratulate.

The Bombay Samachar says:—We have been expressing our dissatisfaction every time the honours list is published in the manner in which some of these titles are conferred. Almost all the recipients of the new honours are English and Native officials. The names of men who are known for their benevolence and public spirit are conspicuous by their absence. Lord Harris has received the title of a K.G.C.I.E., probably by virtue of his being the Governor of Bombay; but we fail to understand why the same honour has been conferred on the Nawab of Junagadh. Unless the principle of the distribution of these honours is radically changed, the public at large will scarcely look upon these titles with feelings of satisfaction and respect.

The Jame-Jamshed considers the last honours' list as even less satisfactory than the previous ones. Government seems to have laid down the principle that only some of their favourite officials and a few Chiefs of Native States should be the recipients of the "New Year's" and "Birthday" honours. The paper asks if Government could not find even four or five men out of the 25 millions of inhabitants of this vast continent worthy of being decorated with the "Stars" of India.

The Akhbar-i-Soudagar is sorry that some of the well-known citizens of Bombay, who ought to have been honoured long ere this, have been left out in the cold. The present honours' list is even a great deal more unsatisfactory than its predecessors.

The Kaiser-i-Hind says:—The Birthday honours' list is unsatisfactory as usual. Only a few Government officials have been decorated to the exclusion of those private individuals who, by their benevolence and public spirit, are worthy of such decorations.

The Kossul-e-Mumbai is sincerely sorry for the disappointment caused to many deserving men whose names do not appear in the honours' list.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.

The Bombay Samachar offers its most sincere congratulations to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress on her attaining the patriarchal age of 72 years. Those who have the rare fortune to be under the British sway—and they are a legion—must necessarily feel proud that the Queen-Empress, who is wisdom and justice personified, and over whose vast dominions the sun never sets, should continue to exercise her beneficent rule over them. It is the earnest wish of the vast and varied subjects of Her Majesty that the Queen-Empress, who, by the grace of God, is in enjoyment of most of this world's blessings, should live for many years to come to rule with justice and equity over diverse people and places in all parts of the world.

THE NATIVE SOLDIERS.

The Native Opinion says:—We admire the characteristic single-mindedness with which our contemporary the Times of India has been advocating the cause of the Native soldier. Writing about certain improvements in the existing system of recruitment our contemporary says:—"Many of their forefathers earned their livelihood by the sword. They have been quiet enough for some years past, but it is impossible to alter the instincts of a race in a couple of generations, and the martial spirit of their forefathers lives in these people still. It should be remembered, too, that these Native soldiers use their rifles every whit as well as Europeans can, and that with European officers to lead them they would no more show an enemy their backs than would a regiment of British infantry." The italics are ours. That the Native soldier can bear fair comparison with his European compeer was never doubted; and yet there are disabilities in his case that shut him out from the higher posts of honour. The European military officer comes from the same average English population from which the soldier is recruited, with this difference—that the European military officer is given a higher training.

UNCOVENANTED CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

The members of Uncovenanted Civil Service of India, says the Gujrat Mitra, have, like her Natives, certain grievances of their own. And their persistent cry for redress having been pushed forward by a persuasive Parliamentarian like Mr. King resulted in the granting of a Parliamentary Committee to make necessary investigations into the matter, and suggest to the home Government a right and desirable course. But there has unfortunately crept a rift in the lute. The Uncovenanted Association—which body has lately been organised to urge their claims more strongly—is of opinion that it is impossible to get justice in their cause in the present Session. The body therefore suggests the advisability of postponing the inquiries until the autumn or next spring, when they expect a new election. The much-desired postponement may perhaps really be due to the fact that their claim wants some time for consolidation and maturity. If the cause is right, if the complaints are just, and if the witnesses are all fully convinced of the existing rigidity of their hardships, we see no reason for postponement. Haste makes waste, of course, but delay often proves dangerous.

LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION FOR LEPERS.

The Rast Gofstar says:—The death in the street of the helpless leper, on whom Dr. Blaney lately held an inquest, is another eloquent appeal, if any more be needed, to the Government for affording legislative protection and relief to this most unfortunate class of human beings. Houseless and homeless, shunned, reluctantly of course, and of sad necessity, by his friends and kinsmen, the poor man was dragging on a miserable existence when he was discovered by a policeman, lying in a dying state on the verandah of a house in Dhubie Talao. He was taken to the J. J. Hospital, where the authorities refused to admit him, and, while the policeman in charge of him was wondering where else the patient could be removed, death came as a happy relief. The jury only reflected the public sentiment when it pronounced an emphatic opinion that an asylum should be provided for the reception of lepers. There was a separate building for these unfortunates in connection with the J. J. Hospital. But it has been lately converted to another use, before the retreat, of which Prince Albert Victor laid the foundation the other day, could be provided for them. If the Government were to wait till they have obtained a practical unanimity among the medical authorities of Europe as to the contagiousness of the disease, they might wait till Domesday, or till an avenging epidemic may come and move them to action. If leprosy is nothing more than an eyesore, the public have a right to demand that it should be hidden from view. Even supposing that leprosy is non-contagious, it is imperative that the Legislature should prevent the propagation of the disease by ordering the strict segregation of the sexes. Build as many asylums as you like, provide them with every comfort you like for the inmates, it will always happen that not an inconsiderable proportion of these unfortunates in every stage of decomposition will prefer, nevertheless, to roam abroad in the wide world, living on public charity. It is meet that our politicians and our political associations should at times descend from Imperial heights, and direct their attention for a while to topics which, humble as they may be, directly and invisibly affect the health and well-being of the people.

DISTURBING MISSIONARIES.—Madras tactics, writes the Indian Witness, do not win in Calcutta. An emissary of the pro-Hindoo party in Madras tried the South of India tactics at the Beadon-square, Calcutta, preaching service, interrupting Dr. Sirkar, who was speaking, demanding immediate answers to rudely-framed questions. He stubbornly refused to desist even when promised by the Rev. K. S. Macdonald, Mr. Aiken, and others that his inquiries would be answered elsewhere, but insisted on breaking up the meeting. At last the police intervened, and invited him to the lock-up to meditate on the error of his ways. When fairly outside the square, his backers made a rush at the police, attempting to rescue their spokesman. Several students, "fired" with religious zeal, were taken along to the lock-up for resisting officers in the performance of their duty. At the same time the missionaries and their friends received a broadside of dust and dirt, with occasionally a heavier missile from those whom this young fanatic had stirred up to mischief. The disturber and his would-be rescuers were tried and convicted in the police-court of wantonly disturbing a meeting. At the request of the complainant he was let off with a warning, on the condition that he should not go near the preaching services there again. His scheme has failed. The plan that succeeded in Madras fails in Bengal.

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN GUARDIANSHIP ASSOCIATION.

The following letter, sent recently to the Times by Sir George Birdwood, is of general interest for Anglo-Indian readers:—

Sir,—I beg the favour of being allowed, through the columns of the Times, to draw public attention in the colonies, India, and this country to the Colonial and Indian Guardianship Association, recently formed with the object of providing a system of quasi-guardianship for English children whose parents are obliged to reside in India and other distant territories of the Empire. The difficulties and anxieties attendant on the education of such children in this country led to the formation of this association of ladies and gentlemen willing to give their services in the attempt to meet a want which long experience had shown to be real and pressing.

From a prospectus which I enclose you will observe that Sir William Muir (formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, and more recently a Member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and now Principal of the Edinburgh University) is chairman of the council, which includes Sir Alexander Arbuthnot (Member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India), Sir Stuart Bayley (Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal), Sir Auckland Colvin (Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, India), Sir P. F. Cunliffe-Owen, Sir W. Wilson Hunter, the Bishop of London, Postmaster-General, Sir Charles Tupper (High Commissioner for the Dominion of Canada), and other equally representative names, whilst the working committee is composed of Mrs. Beynon (wife of General W. H. Beynon), Mrs. Fleming (wife of Canon Fleming), Sir Richard Meade, Lieutenant-General R. M. Macdonald (late Director of Public Instruction for Madras), who is hon. secretary, Mr. Henry S. King, C.I.E. and M.P., and Mr. A. G. Bradley. Before passing from the personal element of the association, it is a noteworthy circumstance that it possesses, in addition to the influential support of those already named, the valuable co-operation of the head masters of Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Winchester, Westminster, Marlborough, Charterhouse, Cheltenham, Haileybury, Clifton, and Wellington, as well as of Miss Beale, the eminent principal of the Cheltenham Ladies' College, and Miss Buss, the distinguished head mistress of the North London Collegiate School for Girls. I know it will be suggested that friends and relatives are generally forthcoming at home for the purposes which this association is intended to serve, but a little reflection will show that though this is so, it is rare to find those possessing the experience needed, even if they have the willingness, to accept so arduous and in most cases thankless a responsibility.

It will be seen that the association is intended only for English children, girls as well as boys, and that it bears nothing of an eleemosynary character, the work being wisely intended to be strictly self-supporting. The undertaking, depending for its success chiefly on the individual care and attention bestowed, is at present restricted within narrow limits, and only such applications are considered as existing means and opportunities enable the working committee to entertain. This committee is assisted in the details of management by a gentleman, as superintendent of wards, who has had many years' personal experience in duties of a similar nature. Except under special circumstances the committee do not receive wards above fifteen years of age, but this rule does not prevent their retaining those who pass this age whilst under their age.

Only such families or schools are selected as are well known to the committee, and valuable data have already been collected from the experience gained in the case of numerous wards who have been entrusted to the superintendent's care. Great importance is attached to the co-operation of tried and trusted families in town and country and to the assurance thus provided, not only of safe and kindly care during the holidays, but still more of such home influences and associations as may compensate as far as possible for the disadvantages entailed on children by separation from their parents. In the choice of families preference is naturally given to any friends or relatives specially indicated for the purpose by parents themselves, whose wishes are, in this and all other matters, followed as closely as possible. Except in the above special cases no additions will be made to the list kept by the superintendent, the number of families, &c., already tried and approved being sufficiently large to render any increase for some time to come unnecessary. Few persons who have visited many preparatory schools at home can fail to have been struck by the singularly large number of children whose parents are abroad and who are kept at school all the year round without any of the change and home associations enjoyed by others. Principals of schools regard these holiday boarders not less ruefully on their own account than on that of the young people themselves, for their presence restricts the needed rest and liberty of the former during vacation, or at least obliges the retention of one or more reluctant members of the staff, who find the cares of supervision no less trying than the duties of teaching; while the feelings of the children themselves, especially on break-up day, when they see their more fortunate schoolfellows starting home, can be imagined. That this is a substantial evil will not be disputed, and it is met by the association in the way already explained.

A sensible hint is given that the earliest possible intimation should be conveyed of the ward's proposed vocation in life, this being often a valuable guide in the selection of suitable schools and families. Of great importance also is the need, so frequently felt by anxious parents both at home and abroad, of some assurance more independent and authoritative than that furnished by ordinary school reports of the student's actual progress. This is provided by a method (more fully explained in the circular) which is not only simple and thoroughly effective, but conspicuously fair to teacher and pupil. It is also pointed out, and with great truth, how desirable is an adequate knowledge of the character and circumstances of each ward. To facilitate confidential communications from parents, and to enable them to be as unreserved as possible, it is suggested, whenever special privacy may be desired, that they should address a private letter to the hon. secretary, or any other member of the committee. A confidential communication of this kind is not laid before the committee, and whatever effect is possible is given to it through the superintendent or otherwise. Detailed statements of accounts and particulars of the ward's health, conduct, and progress are sent to parents at the end of each term. Reports from schools, &c., are sent to the hon. secretary (unless it is otherwise desired), and by him forwarded to parents. The cost of the advantages offered by the association is so moderate as to place them well within the reach of the official and other classes of English people in distant parts of the Empire for whom they are intended. To defray guardianship expenses a charge is made annually of 10 per cent. on the first £100 and 5 per cent. on anything above this sum. Experience has shown that this outlay is more than covered by the economy which can be effected. The lowest terms on which the committee receive wards, whether boys or girls, are £75 a year, a sum which includes guardianship, school, living, clothing, and all other expenses, but is sufficient to provide only a distinctly middle-class education. The main conditions on which the association insists are brief and business-like—the undertaking in writing of some one to be approved by the committee and resident in the United Kingdom, to receive the ward on the termination of the guardianship of the association, or, failing this, the deposit of £75 to meet return expenses; yearly or half-yearly prepayments of the annual sum agreed upon are strictly required, the dates of payment being January 1 and July 1 and the right on the part of the association to terminate the guardianship at any time.

Especially worthy of attention is the important influence which this public work may have on that great evil of Anglo-Indian life which compels husband and wife to separate that the children may be looked after at home. No one with any knowledge of the conditions of English family life in India and tropical countries will question the number and magnitude of mischievous consequences resulting from this deplorable necessity, and any endeavour to lessen it is, I venture to say, entitled to the heartiest support of all those who have the welfare of our colonial and Indian Empire at heart. The warm interest I take in the success of this movement, my conviction of the great public benefit which it is capable of conferring, and its far-reaching usefulness must be my apology for trespassing at such extreme length upon your valuable space.

Permit me only to add in conclusion that the temporary office of the Colonial and Indian Guardianship Association is 52, Stanhope-gardens, South Kensington, and that full particulars will be supplied on application to the hon. sec.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
 GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

MESS PROPERTY IN INDIA.

To whom does the property of the regimental messes of officers belong? The question ought not to be a knotty one, but it has been the cause of some argument and irritation on more than one occasion in the service at home and abroad. It has cropped up again in India in a way which may render it necessary to have the opinions of the law officers of the Crown upon the subject generally. Unfortunately, in the present instance, it has been complicated with an undoubted breach of military discipline; and the authorities, under that circumstance, may act so that the main issue of interest to the body of officers throughout the Services generally may either be distorted or ignored.

The circumstances are simply these. On the order lately issued for the disbandment of the three regiments of the Madras Army, an order was sent to the commanding officers of those regiments, desiring them to hand over all mess property to the new battalions which were in process of being raised for service in Burma, and which would henceforth be known by the old numbers of the disbanded regiments. Upon receiving this order one commanding officer, Colonel Richmond, of the 33rd Madras Infantry, thought fit not only to disobey it, but proceeded to sell up the mess property and divide the proceeds amongst the officers of the old regiment under his command. This, of course, under military law, constitutes a gross disobedience of orders, and for such a breach of military discipline Colonel Richmond is clearly liable.

But his error in having set orders issued by superior lawful military authority at defiance is altogether apart from the question regarding the rights of officers to their regimental mess property. Perhaps in using the word "rights" we are somewhat in error after the recent ruling of the judges in the Queen's Bench in the case of Mitchell v. Regina, which laid down that the officers of Her Majesty's Service had no rights whatever, and that the contracts they had entered into with the Crown, the privileges which they claimed, and the prospects of pay, promotion, and pension held out to them under their contracts, were all favours from the Crown, to be modified, changed, or done away with altogether by Royal Warrant. It might, therefore, be logically argued that if a regimental officer cannot call even, as it were, his "military soul" his own, he certainly could not lay claim to any share in his regimental mess property. It is true that he might attempt to argue that as he had paid for his share of that property he had some sort of a vested right in it. But, then, there are officers who bought their commissions under the old purchase system, and thought that therefore they had a vested right therein; but Royal Warrants have been issued showing the fallacy of this opinion. So if an officer has no claim on the commissions he purchased he, by this course of official reasoning, can have no claim on the mess property he paid for. In fact, he can only say as Wolsey said to Cromwell in the well-known soliloquy:—

"There, take an inventory of all I have;
To the last penny 'tis the King's,"

and he would have to stop there, for not knowing what another Royal Warrant might bring forth he could not with any certainty call as the fallen statesman did his "robe and his integrity to heaven" his own.

But still—although there may be no "rights" in commissions, privileges, and pensions—there are supposed to be certain legal technicalities which make spoons and forks and mess dishes property. The question is to be decided whether on the breaking up of a regiment these articles can be transferred to another corps at the will of the State, just as the rank and file can be transferred, or do they become the property of the officers who provided and paid for them?

On this question some of our Indian contemporaries are exercising their minds, and putting forward arguments to the best of their judgments. The journal which hesitates least in coming to a decision is the Civil and Military Gazette, which says:—

"The mess plate is the property, by gift or by purchase, of a regiment, and is theirs to do with as they like, whether they have spent fifty years or five minutes in the regiment. In connection with this we may remind the authorities that when, some few years ago, a regiment of Irish Militia was disbanded precisely the same course was adopted by the commanding officer as was followed in this instance by Colonel Richmond; but in the case of the Irish Militia there was no question of disobedience of orders, for the simple reason that no attempt was made by the authorities to regulate the disposal of the property. The mess plate was divided amongst the officers, and every officer serving in the regiment received something. In this case, too, there are probably officers, either serving with or on the strength of the regiment, who were in precisely the same position as the probationers of the 33rd Madras Infantry; for in every militia regiment in the United Kingdom there are several young officers who merely serve for a couple of years, and for only a month or so at a time, and who have no intention whatever of remaining permanently in the corps. Yet we are of opinion that neither they nor anybody else would question their claim to be considered as part owners of the mess plate and mess property so long as they remain on the strength of the regiment. Nor do we imagine that military officers will see any reason for thinking differently with regard to the mess property of the 33rd Madras Infantry."

It is very possible that the military officers will be of such opinion, but it is just possible that the military authorities will not. It would be interesting to have the question tested at law, but law is a troublesome and expensive process. It is possible that the authorities will solve the difficulty in a much simpler way—viz., by the issuing of a Royal Warrant declaring that all regimental mess plate has become the property of the State. Confiscation is in fashion just now.

THE BURMA DINNER.

THE Englishmen who have served in Burma, whether in official or non-official capacities, keep up the excellent custom inaugurated some years ago, of meeting once a year to keep together that bond of good fellowship which seems to have been of a wider nature and more firm texture in that Province than in any other part of our Eastern Dominions. The annual Burma dinner has always been a success, for round the banquet table have been gathered men who, whether they were soldiers, civilians, or men of commerce, have been working to one noble end and one purpose, viz., that of helping to make the Province in which their work was cast one of the brightest, happiest, and most prosperous of any over which British rule extends. And if "across the walnuts and the wine" they say smooth things of each other's work, the work itself has proved the justification for the words. It may be taken for granted that the Annual Dinner which is to take place at the Marlborough Rooms this evening will not be a less successful or pleasant gathering than those of former years, although time has taken some away from the old ranks whose absence will be felt to-night. A goodly number of Anglo-Burmans will assemble to do honour to the chief toast of the evening, which will be proposed by the chairman, Sir Rivers Thompson—"Prosperity to Burma." The late Chief Commissioner will be supported in the vice-chair by Mr. Robert Stewart, who, as a member of the well-known firm of James Wyllie and Co., is, perhaps, the oldest and one of the most honoured representatives of "Burma Commerce" in London. Sir C. U. Aitcheson and Sir C. Bernard, both late Chief Commissioners, are expected to be present, as well as Mr. A. P. Macdonnell, C.S.I., lately acting Chief Commissioner, and home on temporary leave. The Army will be represented by General Blake; the Navy by Captain Sir J. Swinburne; the Bench and Bar by Messrs. Pitt Kennedy and Egerton Allen; the Church by the Rev. H. W. Crofton, and the guests by Sir H. W. Cunninghame—all truly "representative" men, not forgetting, however, the "founder of the feast," General Ford, for what would a Burma dinner be without "Barnett Ford?"

We hope to give a full report of this evening's proceedings in our next, and in the meantime,—

"May digestion wait on appetite, and health on both."

PENSIONS and gratuities on account of wounds and injuries fixed in sterling money when disbursed in India will be converted at the annual rate of exchange adopted for the payment of British troops serving in India.

THE Government of India have modified the rule under which all soldiers who pass the final examination at Rurki obtain appointments in the Upper Subordinate establishment of the Public Works Department, irrespective of their place on the competitive list. In future only twelve soldiers will be admitted annually to the Thomason College, and of these the first eight who qualify, and as many more as succeed in passing amongst the first fifteen, will be admitted to the Department. The remainder of the fifteen guaranteed appointments will go to the civilian candidates who are highest on the list. The two guaranteed appointments in the Upper Subordinate grade given to those civilians who fail to pass the engineer test will be considered to be in addition to the fifteen above referred to. The practical result of this change will be that at least half the appointments will go to the civilian candidates, who have hitherto been unfavourably handicapped under the old rules.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 9.

INDIAN FORESTS DEPARTMENT.

Sir R. TEMPLE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India what consideration practically was being given to the recent request by the officers of the Indian Forests Department for the assimilation of their leave and pension rules with those of the Public Works Department.

Sir J. GORST: This is a matter which was under discussion by the Secretary of State and Governor of India when the consent of the Government was given to the proposed committee on the grievances of the Uncovenanted servants of India. The Secretary of State can take no further step till the House of Commons has determined whether the committee shall be appointed.

INDIAN COUNCILS BILL.

On the motion for the adjournment of the second reading of this Bill to Thursday,

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked when this Bill would be taken. He understood from the leader of the House that it would be taken to-night, and it was inconvenient to have the Bill put down night after night.

Mr. BRYCE hoped arrangements would be made for a reasonably long debate:

Sir J. GORST suggested that a question should be put to the leader of the House to-morrow. It had been hoped that the Bill would be taken to-night, and no doubt it would if the business had followed its usual course.

The Bill was accordingly adjourned to Thursday.

JUNE 12.

ANGLO-INDIAN NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the Government of India had made any payments, and for what purposes, to, and which of, the Anglo-Indian newspapers published in India; whether it was with the knowledge or approval of the Secretary of State that an offer was made to the Times of India, a newspaper published at Bombay, as stated in a leading article in that journal, "to become the official organ of the Government of India"; whether the proprietor of the Times of India was correct in saying that in answer to such offer he gave "so clear and distinct a negative as to admit of no misconception"; and whether the Secretary of State would lay upon the table the correspondence relating to this matter.

Sir J. GORST: Except payment for advertisements the Secretary of State is not aware of any payments being made by the Government to Anglo-Indian newspapers. The Secretary of State is not aware of any such occurrence arising or statement being made. There is no correspondence.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: Do I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that the statement in the Times of India is inaccurate?

Sir J. GORST: The Secretary of State is not aware that the Times of India ever made such a statement.

Mr. BRADLAUGH: I will supply the right hon. gentleman with it.

THE POLICE IN INDIA.

In reply to a question put by Mr. BRADLAUGH, respecting the action of the police in certain cases reported to have occurred in Amritsar, a city in the Punjab with a population of over 150,000, Sir J. GORST said: The Secretary of State has no official information. The matter will be referred to the Government of India in the usual way.

THE following is from the Civil and Military Gazette:—"We can scarcely believe that the authorities seriously intend that in future cadets at Sandhurst—and we presume also Militia candidates—are not to be permitted to express a preference for certain regiments, but will only be allowed to say whether they wish to serve at home or abroad. One of the chief reasons why a cadet at Sandhurst worked harder than his fellows was that he might come out near the top of the list, and thus have a better chance of being appointed to the regiment of his choice. Under the proposed system [this incentive to work is quite taken away, while in future much jobbery and favouritism will be charged to the authorities in cases where junior cadets who have never worked at all, and who have made the lives of their instructors a burden, are pitchforked into much-sought-after regiments. Men will in future choose their regiments as much as before; but their success will depend upon private interest, and not upon their public performance at the Military College."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE usual Birthday Parade was held on May 24th at all military stations in India.

GENERAL SOLLY-FLOOD, who is now in Japan, is reported to have been greatly benefited by his sea voyage.

FORT WHITE (Chin Hills) is to be allowed a third-class Station Staff Officer. The appointment at Pynmana and on the Chindwin are abolished.

THE Staff pay of the appointment of Superintendent of Army Clothing, Madras, has been raised to Rs. 800 per mensem to place it on an equality with the appointment in Bengal.

It has been ruled that an appointment of Station Staff Officer has no effect until it is confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief, or when such appointments are not strictly in accordance with the above rule by Government.

THE Government of India have ruled that they are unable to sanction any departure from the existing regulations under which regimental warrant officers are placed on the same footing as non-commissioned officers in respect to passages as laid down in paragraphs 600-24, Army Regulations, India, Volume X., Part II.

It has been decided to allow an officer transferred from one appointment to another while on leave free passage to his new destination when the circumstances are such that he would have been entitled to travel at the public expense if not on leave, provided that when the cost of the journey from the station at which he may be on leave is greater than the cost of the journey from his original station, such excess shall be recoverable from the officer in question. Officers recalled from furlough in case of urgency will also be allowed free passages.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SYMONS, commanding the Myingyan District, proceeds home on leave this month, paying a visit on his way to the Commander-in-Chief in Simla. He will be succeeded by Colonel T. Graham, C.B., lately commanding the Sikkim Field Force. The military authorities in Madras were anxious that the officer appointed to this command should have had some Burman experience, and Colonel Graham is the only senior officer with this qualification, if we except Colonel Stedman, who, however, has had to forego for the present his chances of promotion, as he cannot be spared from his post of Inspector-General of Police in Burma.

SIR GEORGE GREAVES has turned his attention towards the sanitation of cantonments in the Bombay Presidency, and in this connection has recently had under consideration the question of granting sites within cantonment limits for building purposes. Sir George thinks that whilst applications for ground are often worthy of support, nevertheless there must be cases in which general officers might well refuse to accord sanction. The vacant spaces within cantonment limits are of the highest importance in securing thorough ventilation, and add much to the healthiness of a station. In inviting the attention of general officers commanding to this most important matter, Sir George has remarked that the system of granting sites merely for the purpose of increasing cantonment revenues should on no account be permitted. The cantonments in the Bombay Presidency have always had a sanitary reputation. The new Commander-in-Chief is right determined to keep up their good name; but the supply of buildings demand, like the supply of everything else, must always follow the demand. If the demand becomes pressing the best course is to let the supply flow in freely, though of course through sanitary channels.

THE Lahore paper, alluding to the fact that the regular army is many thousands below its establishment, and that there is no immediate prospect of the recruiting becoming any brisker than it has been for months past, observes:—"We have no hesitation in saying that at least one-third of the men who yearly go home for transfer to the reserve, have no wish whatever to leave the service, and that all they want is a trip home, while they are quite ready, at the end of six months or a year, to again take a turn of service in the glowing East. But, no, the authorities tell them that they must make up their minds while still in India. It is impossible to imagine anything more foolish; here are a number of young fellows, in the prime of life, who must be brought home, any way, at Government expense, while their successors must be sent out on the same terms; and yet once they are at home they are sent about their business with all possible despatch, although their re-engagement would have been eagerly accepted in India. Which is likely to make the most useful soldier for Indian service—the man who has seven or eight years' experience of the country, and who is freshened up by a run home, or the young soldier who now comes out in the draft, and is useless for all purposes of actual soldiering for at least two or three years? The hard and fast rule which has been drawn will result in no appreciable increase in the numbers who will re-engage in India, while it undoubtedly will occasion much distress to many good men once they have reached England."

INDIAN ADDRESS TO LORD REAY.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Cowasjee Jehangier, of 3, Cornwall-mansions, who gave a reception some weeks ago to enable Native East Indians resident in England to present an address to Lord Harris on his departure for Bombay, opened their house on Saturday night on the occasion of an address being presented to Lord Reay upon his return from administering the Government of that Presidency. A numerous company assembled, several of whom wore brilliant Indian costumes. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone and Mr. H. Gladstone, the Marquis of Ripon, Lord and Lady Herschell, Mr. Childers, M.P., Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. and Mrs. Sassoon, Prince and Princess Malcom Khan, Prince and Princess Ghika, Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, M.P., Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Cama, Mr. J. N. Bannerjee, Mr. P. R. Valladares, Mr. C. Jehangier, Mr. N. J. Moolla, Mr. N. D. Francis, Mr. E. D. Talati, Dr. F. S. Davar, Dr. Hormusji, and Mr. S. Digby.

Mr. Cowasjee Jehangier read an address to Lord Reay from Natives of India residing in this country. The address recognised, as being in the forefront of the features which had characterised his administration, the successful efforts of his lordship and Lady Reay to break down the barriers which unfortunately continued socially to divide the European and Native communities by throwing open Government House to both alike. The interest taken by Lady Reay in the welfare of the women of Western India, and her co-operation in the movement for the study of medicine by women were also acknowledged, as were Lord Reay's assistance in the development of railways, the extension of irrigation, the strengthening of the defences of Bombay, Kurrachee, and Aden, and the encouragement of medical, legal, and technical education. The points of the address were applauded by the Indian gentlemen.

Lord Reay, in reply, said it had been their wish that Government House should be the means of cementing relations of an amicable character between the various sections of society throughout the Presidency. The more Europeans and Indians mixed together, the more they would appreciate each other—(applause)—and the firmer would be the groundwork of British rule. Estrangement, more than misunderstanding, was a source of weakness, and retarded progress in every direction. Lady Reay looked back with a keen sense of pleasure on the part she had been allowed to take in brightening the lives of Indian women. Fortunately this was a duty which she could continue to discharge here—(applause). With regard to his administration, though much remained to be done in the future for education, railways, irrigation, and many other things, he could confidently state that the most had been made of the financial resources placed at his disposal by the Government of India. He had been enabled to do so much by the cordial assistance received at all times from the excellent staff of public servants, English and Natives. He thanked them all most heartily for their kind greetings.

In the course of the evening Mrs. Jehangier sang "La Serenata," Princess Ghika and Miss Trevelyan accompanying on the piano and the violin.

MARWARIES SOLD.—The following incident of the recent salt strike is not unworthy of record:—"Two up-country salt dealers came down to Calcutta to purchase a supply of salt. Not being interested in the strike they made their purchase of bonded salt, paid the necessary duty, and applied to the Customs authorities and paid for the preventive officers required at the depot to check the weighments. The dealers on strike happening to hear of this cornered the up-country buyers, explained to them the object of the strike, and led them to believe that if they delayed taking delivery they could do so later at a cheaper rate. They eventually induced the strangers not to take delivery. The pass for the duty paid would permit of delivery on any date, but the up-country men had paid for the preventive officers, and their services could not be postponed. They demanded that the leaders of the strike should reimburse them in the amount they had paid on this account, and, rather than that any bonded salt should be taken delivery of, the strikers paid the amount demanded. The Customs officers were on duty at the golaks, but, of course, the up-country dealers did not turn up for their salt. On the same morning two other up-country dealers came down for a supply of salt, and having paid duty on their purchase they called at the preventive office for an officer to attend at the golaks. They were informed that as two officers were already at the depot unemployed they could avail themselves of their services free of cost. It is hardly necessary to add that they took delivery of their purchase rejoicing.

H.H. THE NIZAM'S GUARANTEED STATE RAILWAYS COMPANY.—The tenth ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this company was held yesterday at Winchester House, 50, Old Broad-street, E.C., General Sir Richard John Meade presiding. The report and accounts showed that the gross earnings for the half-year ending December 31st last amounted to £87,637, and the working expenses to £61,860, leaving as net earnings the sum of £25,777. The receipts from revenue had been larger than in any other preceding half-year, but it was impossible, the Chairman observed in moving the adoption of the report, to make any useful comparison with those for the corresponding period of 1888, or even with those for the first half of last year, as the line was not in either case then fully open for traffic. Only thirty-three miles of line was open in August, 1888, and the final section of twenty-two miles of the Bezwada Extension Railway was completed in February last. The receipts for the past half-year had consequently, for the first time, been derived for the whole six months from the entire system of 354 miles. All branches of traffic had contributed to the increase in revenue, and it was gratifying to be able to add that this increase was continuing during the current half-year. The working expenses now included the whole of the engineering and other establishment charges, part of which, during the period of construction, were charged against capital; and this item also included an amount of £10,726 for special expenditure incurred in renewing a further portion of the original line from Wadi to Secunderabad. Mr. John Gleghorn seconded the motion, which was carried. The retiring directors, General Sir R. Meade and Mr. G. H. M. Batten, were re-elected, and a resolution sanctioning payment at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the capital stock was also adopted.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of

of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, the Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tlay efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

'I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life.'—

J. G. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 6th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th June; and from Calcutta to the 4th June.

MR. T. D. LITTLE and Mr. A. T. Beaufor have resigned their seats as additional members of the Bombay Legislative Council.

THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY has given a fancy dress ball at Mahabeshwar, and Lady Harris has had an "At Home," at which a number of ladies played in a cricket match.

LORD REAY's administration, and especially his conduct in regard to education, has been strongly condemned by several speakers at a meeting at Poona.

SIR CHARLES CROSTHWAITE held a birthday durbar in Rangoon, at which the opportunity was taken of bestowing rewards upon a large number of Burmese officials and Native officers of the Military Police for good service rendered in Upper Burma.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SIR JAMES MCQUEEN, commanding the Punjab Frontier Force, has been granted six days' privilege leave.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS BAKER will spend the three months' leave just granted to him in a visit to England, Colonel Griffin, R.A., as senior officer, taking over the command of the Rawal Pindi District in the usual course.

SURGEON PATRICK LEHIR, M.D., Principal Medical officer attached to the Nizam's regular troops, who has been acting for the last three years as Health Officer at Chudderghat Municipality, has just been appointed in the same capacity to the city municipality. Dr. Rustomji has been appointed Inspector-General of Hospitals, vice Surgeon Greenway. Mr. Brockett has been named as successor to Dr. Rustomji.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Council of the United Service Institution, held at Simla under the presidency of the Commander-in-Chief, the gold medal for 1890 was awarded to Captain Maguire, 2nd Hyderabad Cavalry, for his essay on the organisation and employment in war of Native Cavalry. The Macgregor Memorial medal was given to Captain F. E. Younghusband, King's Dragoon Guards, for his exploration in Karjut last year. Captain Mason, R.E., is resigning the secretaryship of the institution: his successor has still to be settled by the committee.

It is officially notified that officers of heavy, garrison, and mountain batteries of Royal Artillery and of Infantry are not eligible for appointment to a Native Cavalry regiment after they attain the age of twenty-three years. Officers of Horse Artillery, British Cavalry, and Field Artillery will, however, be eligible up to the age of twenty-five years.

It has been decided that Fort Tregear, the new military post in the Shendu country, shall be included in the Presidency District command. Haka in the Chin Hills has been constituted a temporary second class command, and will be one of the stations of the Myingyan Brigade.

THE station of Sambalpur is to be removed from the Presidency to the Nagpur District, but will continue to be garrisoned by Madras troops.

SIMLA is growing visibly, for the assembly at the State Ball at Viceregal Lodge was noticed on all hands as being far larger than on any previous occasion. In spite of the ample scale on which the public rooms have been built, the ball-room, drawing room, and corridor were densely crowded, and it was only when the company had thinned a little that the brilliancy of the scene could be fully taken in. For the rest the ball is unanimously pronounced to have been the best as well as the biggest ever held in Simla.

THE route which the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company will adopt in connecting their line with Cuttack and Puri has not yet been decided upon. The facts are that some five years ago Government made a survey from Panchpara via Sambalpur to Cuttack by way of the Brahmani Valley, but Mr. Wynne, the agent of the Company, from observations taken more recently, did not consider this would be a good alignment. He therefore asked that a reconnaissance might be run from Sambalpur across the Mahanadi through Binka, Sonpur, and Bod to Khurda and thence to Cuttack and Puri. This proposal was agreed to, and two of his engineers are now engaged on the work. Mr. Moore, who is in charge of the reconnoitring party, has not yet sent in his report, so the suitability of the alignment to the south of the Mahanadi cannot yet be estimated.

THE Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company are apparently determined to have direct communication of their own with the Eastern Coast at an early date. One of their engineers has just completed a survey of the country between Sambalpur and Cuttack, and his report is favourable to the construction of a line between these two places. It would be some 180 miles in length, and a short connecting branch would have to be made northwards to Panchpara from Sambalpur, which is not actually on the main line. The route to be followed would be along the valley of the Brahmini River for a considerable distance, skirting the road which connects Cuttack and Puri with the inland towns. A considerable pilgrim traffic would be secured by this line, while the grain tracts of the Central Provinces would be brought in touch with Orissa and Ganjam.

THE Government of India, in deference to local official and public opinion, have postponed the consideration of the Bill for extending the Madras Small Cause Court jurisdiction, which was to have become law on July 1st.

AN exhaustive report on the pensions of the Uncovenanted Service has been drawn up at Simla in three parts.

THE first part contains a brief summary of the main facts connected with the history of the pension rules of the Uncovenanted Service.

THE second contains compendiums of the history of 1,000 pound pension of the Covenanted Service with that of 500 of the Uncovenanted.

THE third contains the examination of grounds on which the Government asserts that the pensions of the Uncovenanted Service when paid in England are wholly rupee pensions.

GENERAL dissatisfaction prevails at Simla among the members of the Uncovenanted Service at the delay which is occurring with their cause at home.

THE Ameer was expected to leave Mazar on the 10th inst. for Cabul.

OWING to a serious disturbance with the Sheikh Ali Hazaras the Ameer has collected a large force at Shenkai, between Kolat-i-Gilzai and Ghazni.

THE home authorities have been communicated with regarding the murderer of Mr. Dalgleish, with a view to the Extradition Treaty being put in force.

THE Pathan is in safe custody meanwhile in the Russian hands at Samarcand.

THE British India Company is likely to obtain the new coolie contracts for Trinidad. The company has already had a wide experience in coolie transport between India and Natal and Mauritius.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire took place in the town of Nilakwada, within the jurisdiction of H.H. the Gaekwar of Baroda. About 200 houses and a large quantity of grain and other property were burnt. The damage is estimated at about two and a-half lakhs of rupees.

THE Cawnpore regimental magazine, where blank ammunition is manufactured, blew up a few days back, killing one man and severely injuring another.

IT is practically settled that the East Coast Railway will be constructed on the broad gauge.

MANY cases of cholera in the surrounding districts are reported at Daipalpur, about twenty-five miles from Mhow. Eighteen Court officials out of twenty-five fell victims in one day.

THE proceedings of the Sir Salar Jung Debt Commission are about to be resumed, and creditors who had hitherto no locus standi will now be allowed to appear in person or by counsel to watch their interests.

A DASTARDLY attempt was made on the 29th ult. on the life of a European soldier of the Transport Department stationed at Trimulgherry.

MISS ARBUTHNOT and Mr. Maxwell, who lately met with a riding accident, are now said to be doing well.

NOTES.

THE news from India to-day is dull and uneventful. In the plains, when the mail left, the hot and weary forced dwellers or sojourners thereon were rejoicing at the approach of the monsoon, which reached Calcutta on the 4th inst., bringing with it the glad and longed-for downpours of rain.

IN the hills the monsoon is of little account. The happy dwellers and sojourners there can do without south-west or other winds so long as amusement comes from any quarter. One of "our own correspondents" at Simla, who boasts that he has a "reflective mind," complains in the journal which gives him three columns of space for his reflections that there is not another society in the wide world with which a little amusement goes such a long way as in the "isolated, pleasure-surfeited, dissipation-worn" community of Simla.

THE writer does not mean these epithets to be taken literally. He puts them down as epithets used by people who cannot get to Simla, and who must therefore be filled with envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness towards people who can and do get to the mountain. He merely means to be sarcastic.

BUT he says, evidently in earnest, that—"To the observant looker-on there are many signs that Simla is outgrowing the state of things that it has inherited from the days when its society was composed of a little circle of officials, all knowing each other more or less intimately, and has already entered on a transition period which will bring about a modification of many of its standards in social matters." It might be thought that this refers to some pending important revolution in the morals and manners of the mountain. Not a bit of it. It is merely a prelude to a suggestion that the present system of amateur theatricals cannot last. The professional must come in the end.

ANOTHER Simla correspondent who, his editor says, "looks somewhat ahead," informs the Bombay public that "on the retirement of Sir Frederick Roberts at the end of his year's extension of service, Sir George Greaves will succeed to the Indian command in chief. Sir Thomas Baker would then have the choice of the Bombay and Madras commands, probably electing for the latter, which gives the advantage of prolonged residence in the Neigherries." Wise man, Sir Thomas; but the "look out" is somewhat "ahead."

UNDER date of Madras June 5th we read—and it is sad reading—"The Local Congress Committee have issued a circular appealing for funds. It states that of Rs. 6,400 promised towards the expenses of the Indian Political Agency not a pice has been paid. Telegrams have been received from Mr. Digby stating that the work must stop if the money be not sent at once." Poor Mr. Digby! Now he realises how much sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have an ungrateful child.

THE Bombay Gazette says:—"Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., despite his recent 'crushing,' is coming out to India again next cold weather, arriving in Bombay probably at the end of October. He intends going to Burma, and probably to the North-West Frontier. His friends say that Mr. Caine, with the possible exception of Sir Charles Bernard, is the only person in England who has read the big despatch and its enclosures. Members of Parliament, we are told, refuse to look at it, and the general feeling is that there must have been a good deal in Mr. Caine's attack if it required four hundred pages to answer it."

THE statement made by the Madras Times that the office of Military Secretary to the Government of Madras would most likely be abolished after the incumbency of the present occupant is premature. Brigadier-General Kenney Herbert writes to the Madras Mail, and states that, as long as the Presidential system is maintained, so long will there exist a Military Secretary to Government. The Madras Mail adds that General Herbert will probably be continued in his office after the term of his tenure of office expires until the proposed changes in connection with the abolition of the control of Presidential armies by local Governments are effected.

THE Pioneer comments on the apathy displayed by the "Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China" in proceeding against its defaulting Native cashier in Calcutta. "More than a month had elapsed since the chairman, at the general meeting of shareholders held in London in April, announced large defalcations by one of the Native cashiers, and people in Calcutta have been at a loss to understand why legal proceedings were not immediately instituted here against the defaulter, who has doubtless availed himself of the interval to arrange his affairs in a manner which may, perhaps, render the bank's recovery of any portion of the amount stolen more difficult." Another journal hints that there has been an object in the delay—viz., the hope of getting the cashier's rich family to "settle up," not an uncommon arrangement in India in like circumstances.

THE Lahore paper says:—"That any able-bodied man should be induced to commit suicide in India because of difficulty in making both ends meet, argues ignorance on his part as to the pleasures we afford to criminal life. It is said that 'a sturdy Afghan of the retinue of Sirdar Ayub Khan, committed suicide lately on the ground of small pay. This foolish act was evidently committed from a want of understanding as to our system. India affords a vast field for such 'sturdy' men; and it is almost a pity to find that they are going the wrong way about life. When there are houses to be burgled, and, at the worst, pleasure-houses, commonly called jails, to receive the burglars, where everything is provided on a liberal scale, it is inexcusable that there should be suicides by sturdy Afghans. The only explanation of it is that these people judge of British India by their native country; and this is a great wrong."

Rather late in the day, but better late than never, the Government of India is causing search to be made amongst the dusty archives of the Foreign Office, Calcutta, with the view of saving some historical records from the ravages of time and the white ants. The compilation of State papers and secret consultations of Council during the governorship of Warren Hastings are being published. This is well, and is following the excellent example of the India Office here, where Mr. Julian Danvers is doing good service to the scholar and the historian by his search amongst the Records. A report on the miscellaneous old records of the India Office, with a supplementary note by Sir George Birdwood, has just been issued, which, from the slight glance we have as yet only had time to take at it, promises a rich treat for further reading and notice.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 22.

Some weeks ago the Bengal Chamber of Commerce addressed the Government on the subject of the defective system of ascertaining public opinion regarding projected commercial legislation, and urged that the mercantile community should be consulted before Bills affecting its interest were introduced. The protest was supported by all the Chambers of Commerce in India. Yesterday the Government reply was received. It asserts that ample time is given for the discussion of commercial measures between the introduction and passing of Bills. It is understood that the Chamber considers the answer unsatisfactory, and probably will not allow the matter to rest here. Several instances have occurred lately, notably in the case of the Inland Navigation Act, where amendments materially altering pending measures were added by a Select Committee, and passed after a few days' notice without opportunity for objection being given to persons affected.

Colonel Conway Gordon's report on the Indian railways states that 869½ miles were opened during the last financial year, making the present total 16,095 miles. The chief sections opened were 209 miles on the Bengal-Nagpore line, 165 on the Indian Midland, and 199 on the Southern Mah-ratta. Two new military lines were sanctioned—namely, from Mianwali to Mari and the Chaman extension on the Scinde-Pishin railway, also one famine and five commercial lines. The financial results of the State worked railways show a considerable improvement. Two important events—the practical completion of the Khojak tunnel and the opening of the Damodar bridge on the Bengal-Nagpore line—have happened since the close of the year reviewed. The survey recently ordered for the purpose of ascertaining the possibility of making a railway from Peshawur along the Cabul river is now completed. It is understood that the surveyors found the gradients light and the tunnelling comparatively easy, and that this route would be shorter than one direct through the Khyber. They were for some time in danger owing to the unfriendly attitude of the Mohmund tribe, who fired several shots at the party, but orders from the Ameer's Commander-in-Chief and the Khan of Lalpoora dispersed the hostile gathering, and permitted the completion of the work without actual collision.

The Nawab Ashanoolah Khan Bahadoor, a wealthy Mahomedan zemindar in the Dacca district, has sent a donation of Rs. 1,000 to the fund for the survivors of the Balacava charge. He writes that he has always had great admiration for the little band of heroes who covered themselves and England with glory, and cannot forget that they fought in the cause of Islam, and that it was mainly due to the support of the English and French armies that the Sultan obtained a signal victory over the Russians.

The news that Sir F. Roberts's term of office as Commander-in-Chief has been extended for two years has been received with general satisfaction throughout India, especially by the army. It is hoped that he will now be able personally to supervise the completion of the system of frontier defences, as well as other reforms for improving the condition of the army, with which he has been so long associated.

The Government have published a book which will be of the greatest interest and value to students of the history of British India—namely, a compilation of the State papers and secret consultations of Council during the governorship of Warren Hastings, which are preserved in the archives of the Foreign Office at Calcutta. The work throws a flood of light on a most interesting period, and gives ample material for vindicating Hastings's reputation. It is edited by Professor Forrest, the Director of the Records of Bombay, a gentleman whose name is already well-known as the editor of several volumes of the State papers of the Western Presidency.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 21.

The detailed report of the survey for the proposed railway from Mandalay to the Salwen River shows that the engineering difficulties are more serious than had been anticipated. It is suggested that the Gokteck Gorge, one of the most serious obstacles, may be crossed by a bridge with a span of 300 to 500 feet, thus avoiding some costly cuttings and embankments. There is no immediate prospect of this line being commenced. The Government of India have limited the outlay on railways in Burma to 50 lakhs yearly. The entire amount available is required for the construction of the Mu Valley line to Mogoung, and thence eventually to Bhamo. A line to the Salwen would give a new lease of life to Mandalay by making it a depôt of Chinese trade.

Sir C. Crosthwaite's health causes his friends uneasiness. His eyesight is considerably affected.

Numerous surrenders of small dacoit gangs are announced. In the Myingyan district two dacoit chiefs have been taken, for whose capture rewards of 5,000 and 1,000 rupees were offered.

On the Chin frontier the telegraph wires continue to be frequently cut by the Chins.

High prices rule in the rice market, and prices are likely to rise owing to the large demand for Japan. Some 50,000 tons have been already shipped or are to be sent to Japan from Burma.

As various disputed questions connected with the Siamese frontier have arisen and are likely to arise over the report of the frontier Delimitation Commission, it may be interesting to mention that some twenty years ago the question of what was the frontier between Siam and Burma was judicially decided in the Court of the Recorder of Moulmein, and was confirmed by the High Court of Calcutta. The question arose during the progress of a case relating to the right to certain forests.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These shares yesterday were dull, and a reduction of about 1-16 took place in most of the leading descriptions. Mysore Shares were last quoted 4½ to 4¾, Nundydroog 1½ to 2, Indian Consolidated 1s. 6d. to 1s. 9d., Balaghat-Mysore (New) 8s. to 8s. 6d., Ooregum Ordinary 1 15-16 to 2 1-16, ditto Preference 1½ to 1¾, Devala-Moyar 2s. 3d. to 2s. 9d., Nine Reefs New (11s. paid) 4s. 3d. to 4s. 9d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 7s. to 8s., Mysore-Wynaad (18s. paid) 1s. to 1s. 6d., South-East Mysore, 1s. 6d. to 2s., Indian Glenrock 3d. to 9d., Gold Fields of Mysore 8s. to 9s., New South-East Wynaad 6d. to 1s., and Mysore West (16s. 6d. paid) 1s. 6d. to 2s.

A good deal of crime in the Central Provinces has been traced to wandering gangs of strangers. No fewer than 205 such gangs, numbering 2,045 souls, passed through the Seoni district during the past year, chiefly Bungaras and Beluchis. Steps have been taken to keep a close watch on their movements.

LOCAL Self-Government in the Punjab does not seem, says the Pioneer, to have made any particular progress last year, though there were fewer of those glaring cases of failure among municipalities which have from time to time attracted the attention of the Lieutenant-Governor. The number of Committees originally instituted was certainly excessive, petty villages with ridiculously small sources of income being placed on the list in a rather haphazard way. Three of these minor municipalities, all in the Kangra district, were abolished in 1888-89, and local officers have recommended that five more should be dealt with in a similar manner. The elective system is only in force in one of these villages, Vairawal in the Amritsar district, and here it is said the Committee only exists in name, as the members take little or no interest in their duties. This will leave 153 municipalities in the Province, of which nearly one-third have individual incomes of less than Rs. 5,000 a-year. If most of these were swept away it would be no loss to the people, for it is only too plain that with such limited means at their disposal the Committees can only play at local self-government. Many of them hold only three or four meetings in the twelvemonth, and the members certainly do not seem anxious to discharge the honorary duties which they have accepted. The official way of putting this is that, "reviewing the Province as a whole, it seems clear that in many of the smaller municipalities a want of energy and public spirit on the part of members is still noticeable, as might be expected. In some cases local factions have disturbed the harmony of proceedings." Sir James Lyall is evidently inclined to be very patient with these apathetic bodies, though a little heroic treatment in their case would probably do no great harm.

CONSUMPTION OF SALT.

(Pioneer.)

The total figures for the Salt Revenue during the year ended on April 1st correspond very exactly with the estimate given of them in the Financial Statement, in which the returns of March had to be taken conjecturally. Excluding Burma, the consumption for the year was put by Sir David Barbour (in thousands of maunds) at 31,010. Burma adds 1,190,000 maunds of imported salt; and the total consumption for all India stands finally at 33,094. It is satisfactory to see, comparing this figure with that of the previous year, that the marked check to consumption which followed upon the raising of the duty in 1888 has disappeared; but the total is still something, though very little, below those of the two years preceding the enhancement. Of course, it may be said that keeping stationary in a case like this counts for very little; that the absence of a rise in consumption is in itself, considering the yearly increase of population, an abnormal phenomenon which amply reveals the pressure of the tax. There would be a great deal in this view unquestionably were the question an entirely straightforward one and all eccentric influences absent; but, on looking into the figures a little more closely, it will be apparent that in most of the Provinces the consumption has increased, and very considerably, and that it is, in fact, only Burma and Bengal that throw the total back. The peculiar circumstances of each of these Provinces in the matter of the consumption of salt were alluded to in the Budget. Bengal, as everyone knows, depends chiefly on Cheshire salt, and it is quite as much the rise in prices that has brought about the English salt corner as the enhancement of the duty in India that has retarded consumption there. As to Burma the falling-off in the year that followed the increase of the duty was too great really to prove anything. The imports of salt (again in thousands of maunds) fell at one drop from 1,931 to 314. Now, it is absurd to say that the higher duty can have forced people to give up a necessity like salt to the extent that these figures would imply. The explanation has been partly found in the state of the local market, but the more important cause was probably the general resort to the locally manufactured article. The question, therefore, of properly adjusting the tax between the local and imported supply has become one of much importance, and the Government some time ago sent Mr. Ashton, of the Salt Revenue Department, to investigate it on the spot. His report is now before the Chief Commissioner, and it may be supposed that the action taken upon it will depend upon the facts that he brings out in regard to the feasibility of keeping a check over the production of the local establishments. If it is found that such a check is an impossibility it is not easy to see what the Government can do but suppress the local manufacture altogether, as they suppressed it aforetime in Orissa.

MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS IN BOMBAY.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Bombay Government Gazette this week contains a batch of notifications which show at all events that the Government are not indifferent to the progress of local self-government in the Mofussil. Nearly all of them relate to the Belgaum district, and may be arranged in two categories, the one constituting a number of towns as permanent municipal districts, and the other withdrawing from certain municipalities the right to elect half of their numbers which is conferred by Section 11 of the Act of 1884. The friends of local self-government may think that they see in a Gazette of this kind a stroke from Arthur's mystic sword Excalibur, with its inscription "Take me up" on one side, and "Cast me down" on the other. There has, indeed, been a good deal done both in the raising and the lowering of municipal institutions in the Presidency of late. Lord Reay not long since announced that since the close of the last official year final notifications for the establishment of seventeen new municipalities had been issued in the Northern and Central Divisions, while preliminary notifications had been published for seventy-four towns in various parts of the Presidency. There is danger that the blessings of local self-government, whatever they may be, should be scattered with too prompt and a free hand. The eighteen notifications which deprive as many municipalities in the Belgaum district of the privilege of elective representation find their justification in each case in an alleged lack of interest on the part of the inhabitants in municipal administration. There are parts of the Presidency, indeed, in which the attitude of the inhabitants towards municipal administration is much more unfavourable than of mere indifference. In some of the smaller towns the inhabitants regard the municipality as anything but a blessing, bringing with it, as they think it does, a burden of trouble and expenditure quite outweighing any dignity that it may confer upon the citizens. Sir Charles Dilke tells a story of one old Native gentleman, who, having had the working of municipal institutions in his town, carefully explained to him, observed that he thought he began to understand. "It means, does it not," he asked, "that while you used to get rupees out of us you will now get rupees and work." This must have been a type of the citizen who, in the words of the Government notification, shows a lack of interest in the affairs of his municipality; and where men of this kind abound it is no hardship for the Government to declare that Sections 11 and 12, which endow municipalities with carefully conditioned self-governing powers, had better be withdrawn. We do not know if the gentlemen who have allied their political fortunes with Mr. Bradlaugh's Legislative Council Bill will be able to draw any teaching from such an experience as this. But if the inhabitants of eighteen towns in a single district show a systematic indifference to the affairs of their own towns, where does Mr. Bradlaugh expect to find that living and intelligent interest in the affairs of the larger world around them, which alone can make the electorate which he proposes to constitute a reality? If the Congress people, instead of working downwards from fine philosophical principles of popular representation, and in working downwards coming only half-way towards the facts, would work upwards from such concrete facts as Gazette notifications occasionally furnish us with, there might be a little less eloquence upon Congress platforms in England, but we should have fewer workings out of the outlines of a fool's paradise.

PIG-STICKING EXTRAORDINARY.

(Indian Planter's Gazette.)

Even the Kanti pig-sticking episode has been cast into the shade. On a bright day in this pleasant month of May that well-known old sportsman, "Jupiter Ammon," sent greeting to all his "pals," and bid them come to hunt the wily boar in the jungles near Ramdasspore. Beautifully worded was his letter, telling in what countless numbers the pig had mustered, and how they were devastating the melon and cheena crops of the poor agriculturists. Harrowing was the tale he told of the unfortunate virgin widow who had been ripped up by one huge tusker. In response to the invite all the neighbouring griffs turned up on the evening before the date fixed. "Daddy," "Bismarck," and the Boy from the chaste groves of Shapur Mircha, while Mia Chupra sent forth the Seedy one and pretty "Louise." Also in their company came the titled scion of a long line of aristocratic ancestors, the noble Admiral. But this ancient spearman being known as choleraic in temperament, and not standing having his leg pulled, was put up to the cruel joke that was to be played on the new chums. In the grey light of the early morning, while the brave youths were still snoring away the effects of the liberal potations of the night before, Jupiter, mounted on the Jemadar's tat, might have been seen warily stalking across the factory zerats, preceding four stalwart Dusadhs, on whose shoulders rested a thick bamboo, attached to which by its legs was a plump but dirty specimen of the common or village sus. On arrival at a small piece of Nurkhut piggy was let loose, and Jupiter returned to the bungalow to waken his sleepy guests. Terrible was the amount of chota-haziri wolfed, and loud the yells for spurs and spears, but truth compels us to add that ere getting into the saddle each hero was seen to mysteriously call the bearer on one side and then emerge from the dining-room breathing on the ambient air; strong evidence that they had imbibed the liquor that cheers, encourages, and inebriates. "Bismarck" was distinctly seen to pocket one of Herr Schrottky's renowned German sausages with the remark, "Vell, if I cannot kill de gott tam pig I vill revenge myself by ating him." At last they all got to horse and accompanied by over 100 howling coolies armed with battle-axes, lathis, and the musical "tom-tom," proceeded to the jungle. They went straight to the place where piggy was planted, but in spite of the fiendish row kicked up nothing broke. Then the factory Jemadar, cautiously approaching Jupiter, informed him that poor piggy's legs were so swollen from the way he had been tied to the bamboo, that he was dead lame and couldn't move. At last out rushed a seemingly terror-stricken coolie, shouting out that the biggest boar he had ever seen, with tusches surpassing those of an elephant, was inside, but refused to budge. "In you go, noble sportsmen," said Jupiter, "Admiral and I will wait outside in case he should escape you." "Now's your chance, Bismarck," says Admiral, "to show what doughty deeds a German can perform." "Mein gott, no," says Bismarck. "For why he vill bite mine horse." "But imagine him to be a French lache." "Den gott in himmel. I will go," says Bismarck, and followed by the rest he gallantly galloped his 13-hand tat into the grass up to the pig and bravely delivered first spear; and then Daddy, the Boy, and Louise dashed in, and dauntlessly finished the enemy off. They moved on in further quest of game, each warrior telling the other how sure he felt that the defunct "janwar" was far beyond the ordinary height. Alas! save a mangy jack or two they saw no more game, so they returned to breakfast, hungry yet happy; but when pipes and pyjamas had been called for the sirdar bearer on a silver salver presented with a low salam to our Teutonic friend the following little voucher:—

Bismarck, Esquire,
Due to Nurkoo Dusatdh.
To 1	Slaughtered sow	...	...	2 4 0
"	Hopes of family vanished	...	...	1 6 0
"	Carrying living sow to jungle	...	...	0 6 0
Total				Rs. 4 0 0

History does not say whether Bismarck paid up and looked pleasant, but at any rate he and the other griffs took their revenge in a copious punishment of Jupiter's cellar.

STATE NON-INTERVENTION IN THE QUESTION OF HINDU CHILD-MARRIAGES.

(Madras Times.)

The discussion whether State-interference to put down or discourage child-marriages among the Hindus is justifiable is now engaging attention in certain quarters. It is recognised both by those who advocate State-interference, and by those who are averse to any such measure, that child-marriage is a social evil, and that all ordinary methods which the average reformer has recourse to are unavailing to check this serious evil. The reason why the willing reformer is powerless in the matter is that, although he recognises the immense evil to society engendered by the system of child-marriage, and would fain persuade others to share his views, yet he dares not stem the current of public opinion, and act in the light of his own convictions, for fear of being obliged to undergo greater social evils meted out to him and his. The consideration of a greater evil drives out the consideration of a less. It is claimed for the institution of Hindu child-marriages that it has come down from time immemorial. At least it has been practised in India for long centuries; and, as the effect of such continued practice, the institution has come to be regarded in the popular mind as practically beneficial. It was only during the present generation that the benefit of the institution began to be seriously and widely questioned; and we can trace in this the healthy effects of the collision of mind with mind and knowledge with knowledge. Oriental thought brought in contact with Western thought has developed in ways and directions unknown before; and though the Oriental mind has not ceased to be Oriental, yet it has got much of the tinge of the Western mind; and hence the unrest which now characterises Hindu society—an unrest which will not cease until, if inimical causes do not intervene, equilibrium be restored between the methods of thought of the East and the West.

This awakening of the East by the influence of the West has been only partial, and has not reached the dense substratum of the masses. Though the upper surface of the Hindu community had been ruffled and put into a state of unrest in a comparatively short time, yet the forces which are to produce commotion among the deeper waters should be more varied, more intense, and longer-sustained. This the reformers who would do away with child-marriages are ready to acknowledge, and none more so than those among them who plead for State-interference. Among the reasons adduced for the justifiableness of State-intervention is that the Government which abolished suttee cannot consistently refuse to abolish child-marriage. Both institutions are worked up into the religious code of the Hindus, though the connection between them and religion might have been once remote. The throwing of children into the Ganges was an act dictated by Hindu religion or superstition, and yet the Government, which seems loth to interfere in matters pertaining to religion, has effectually interfered to put a stop to that horrible custom. Why should Government now strain at a gnat when it had swallowed a camel, not once or twice, but repeatedly? The party opposed to State-interference of any kind states in reply that since these instances of interference, the State has been pledged by the proclamation of the Queen to the policy of non-interference, and that its hands are now tied up. But to view the facts, its hands have not been tied up; they are as wonderfully brisk as ever—as witness the prohibition of the Churruck pooja, long after the date of the Proclamation. The fact is that the State, true to its tradition, is wonderfully alive to the evils wrought to life or property, whether those evils be brought about by religion or any other cause, and is firmly resolved to eradicate them. The Churruck pooja, with its long pole firmly fixed in the ground, and revolving cross-bars, from which hang, suspended in various postures, a long roll of mutilated humanity, in the hope of pleasing an avenging god and goddess, is a sight neither edifying nor pleasant. The civilisation of the nineteenth century, even amongst the Hindus themselves, recoils against any such spectacle; and the State, if it lays claim to be civilised and enlightened, cannot well be a calm spectator of such fanatic tomfoolery, especially when it is accompanied by horrid mutilations and tortures, which, though they do not palpably benefit the persons on whom they are inflicted, yet have a demoralising and terrorising effect on the other subjects of the State. The State now permits the harmless escapades of the Audi festival, and allows its law-abiding subjects to deck themselves fantastically in leaves, and with no other clothing go round and round the shrine of some goddess, in imitation of their ancestors, who went about with no other clothing but aprons made of leaves; but the time will come, we fancy, when even this harmless diversion will be looked upon by the State with disfavour, on the score of its being opposed to public health and convenience.

No one for a moment supposes that the State will allow a man to lead his fellow-men to the shambles because his religion dictates to him the butchery of human beings as an ordinance commanded by the author of his being. And what else but a leading of little innocents to the shambles, it may be asked, is the practice of Hindu child-marriage? Even the advocate for introducing here the "Royal Marriage Act," whereby no person under the age of twenty-five years is allowed to marry, will not be in a position to show that a good number of the parties contracting marriage even after that age will not go to the shambles. The mortality among children is no doubt greater than among adults, and advantage is taken of this fact to advance a one-sided argument concerning the evils of child-marriages. It is argued that by reason of such marriages many girls are made widows, and are doomed to a life-long widowhood. They are undoubtedly doomed to a life-long widowhood, but the question is, how long? Does not the same cause which has operated to make them widows operate to put them out of a life of widowhood? As boy-husbands die so will death be busy among girl-wives also; and of those girl-widows who have the misfortune to survive the ailments of childhood, and live to a long age, it cannot be said that they are much worse off than those who have become widows in more advanced life. And among a people to whom the exercise of choice in marriage is unknown it does not matter whether the married couples be young or otherwise. The real difficulty lies in the fact that public opinion is decidedly opposed to widow-marriage. If this sets itself right the other question will be easily adjusted. The State itself has gone as far as it can on the subject of widow-remarriage; and to go further, and also to take to itself the consideration of the question at what age its subjects shall marry, would be to assume a function it has long since abrogated even in its original country. The State no longer disposes of its subjects in marriage, and to decide at what age the daughters of the land shall marry when public opinion on the subject is uneducated, and is much the same as before, were virtually to assume the functions of the parents themselves. But the policy of all enlightened Governments now is to leave their subjects more and more to the exercise of their rights, as parents, guardians, and citizens, and to confine themselves more and more to the protection of person and property of their subjects. The utmost that a State will do in modern times is to educate its subjects out of some pernicious custom, and not by pains and penalties force them to refrain from a certain usage which, however, mischievous it may be in its effects, does not, speaking generally, militate against the safety of person and property, which the State has in its sacred keeping.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

(Rangoon Times.)

Much has been talked and written of late of the inefficiency of the Madras Army. It has, no doubt, been falling off since the introduction of the Staff Corps system, some twenty-five years ago. With constant rumours of disbandments before it—with young officers brought from British regiments to serve with men with whom they are unacquainted, the wonder is that Madras regiments have done so well as they have done, and have not oftener broken down under the strain placed upon them. It is said that the military spirit has died out in the Madras Presidency, and yet there are some corps in it, notably the Madras Sappers, who, man for man, would probably give a good account of themselves in an encounter with any Native regiments in Bengal. The large number of men from Coringa, recently recruited in the Madras Presidency, is, no doubt, one reason for the falling-off of regiments. We see a good deal of Coringa coolies in Burma seaports. They are industrious, frugal, and hardworking. But they are not the stamp of men to make sepoy out of, although in quarters they, doubtless, give less trouble than the pariahs in the Sappers or Mahomedans, who form the bulk of the cavalry, and whose fighting qualities are undoubted. It is hopeless to expect any improvement in Madras regiments with the bugbear of disbandment ever hanging over their heads, but we cannot see an army which has fought our battles in India for over a century, and which remained loyal to us in the great temptations of 1857, doomed to extinction without regret. If some Madras sepoys have failed in their duty as soldiers the last few years in Burma, we believe the fault lay with the system of officering them more than with the men themselves. It is to be regretted that steps were not taken by Sir H. Prendergast, after Minhla, to punish the sepoys misbehaving. The matter was then, in a measure, hushed up by the authorities, and the whole Madras Army is now suffering for the fault of a few. It would, we think, be impossible to revive or uphold discipline in any army with the threats of wholesale disbandment of regiments hanging over it, as is the case with the Madras Army at present. If the old loyal Coast Army has failed us in our need, we owe the fact, we believe, to the new-fangled Staff Corps system, and depriving the sepoys of officers whom they knew, and in whom they had confidence. A Clive or a Neill might, perhaps, even now restore the Madras regiments to their previous high standard of discipline and efficiency. But it seems a hopeless task to expect from the Staff Corps men, constantly transferred from one regiment to another, and more interested in pension and leave rules than in the sepoys they are supposed to command.

THE ARMS ACT IN BURMA.

The Rangoon Times recently published a letter on the hardship of the working of the Arms Act in this province, and in commenting on this says:—We have been assured that there is no absolute uniformity in carrying out the provisions of the Act, and that a man may be allowed to carry arms in one part of Burma whilst he is liable to fine and imprisonment in another part of the province for even possessing a gun. It will, perhaps, be quite impossible to have any Arms Act which shall not create some individual hardship in its working. On the other hand, we think, it has been sufficiently proved that amidst such careless and excitable people as our Burmese fellow-subjects it is necessary to have an Arms Act with stringent provisions for the safety of the majority. We think that education should have something to say as to whether a man is allowed to have a gun or not. It has been often said that in our recent troubles in Burma we never had an English-speaking dacoit or rebel in the field against us. However much they may sin and break the law in other respects, the Burman or other lad in this province, turned out with a smattering of English education from our schools, is not an absolute fool, and he sees well enough that, in a struggle such as has recently taken place in Burma, the civilised man is sure to be the victor in the end. But in Burma the Burmese, although the majority of them may be passively loyal to us, and wise enough not to use arms against us, they might if they held guns allow them to be borrowed by bad characters or evil-disposed persons, engaged either in dacoity or plots to subvert the existing order of things. It is, therefore, wise not to allow such men to be armed as a rule, although there are, of course, exceptions, and we would in the case of educated men of any nationality in Burma show our trust in them by allowing them to possess a gun if they desired it, and bound themselves not to lend it to any unlicensed individual.

THE FOREST DEPARTMENT.

(Englishman.)

Some time ago we drew attention to what appears to us the irresistible claim of the forest officers recruited from England and professionally trained under the orders of the Secretary of State for India to the pension rules now applicable to the Public Works and Telegraph Department. One of the many weighty arguments used by the officers of the department in support of their claim is that since candidates for the service are trained at Cooper's Hill, together with those of the Public Works and Telegraph Departments, it is obvious that so long as the forest officers are subjected to less favourable rules of service or pension the department can only recruit such candidates as fail to enter the Public Works and Telegraph Departments. This inferiority in the class of candidates has been emphasised during the past two years by the fact that the requisite number of qualified candidates could not be obtained from those presenting themselves for examination. The remedy for this unsatisfactory state of things clearly lies in placing the Forest Department on an equality in every way with the Public Works and Telegraph Departments, and we are glad to learn that something has now been done in this direction. The Secretary of State, in consideration of the course of training having been extended from two to three years, has recently sanctioned an initial pay of Rs. 350, instead of Rs. 250 a month for Assistant Conservators on joining in India. This desirable concession, when considered side by side with the extra year's training, which costs the candidate £183, is not, however, calculated to effect much improvement in either the quality or number of recruits, particularly as hitherto an Assistant Conservator could count on his promotion to Rs. 350 on passing in the language by the Lower Standard, and being certified competent to hold charge of a sub-division—qualifications which he could make sure of in a year. The more substantial improvement of the prospects of officers, which would be the outcome of the grant of the more favourable pension rules, is what is urgently called for. So far sanction to this has, we understand, been withheld, and we may safely predict that until the Secretary of State can see fit to concede this important point, and so remove a grievance long felt by officers now in the department, the recruitment at home must continue to be difficult and unsatisfactory. Candidates cannot fail to be influenced by the knowledge that favourable rules affecting two departments are withheld from a third, even though these rules may relate to far-off pensions which only a small percentage of the officers will live to draw.

DIFFICULTY OF DISPOSING OF A DEAD ELEPHANT.

(Times of India.)

There is an old adage commonly used among the Natives of India, which may be translated to the effect that the remains of a dead elephant must be buried in the same place where it dies. This proverb was amply exemplified only the other day at Nowsaree, and within the jurisdiction of H.H. the Gaekwar of Baroda. A correspondent from that place says that a tame elephant, which had been kept there for many years past, died very recently. The news was at once wired to Baroda, and sanction for expenses incidental to the burial of the animal was obtained from the higher officials. The local authorities then held a "council" among them as to how the remains of the pachyderm should be removed to a distant part of the town, where it could be buried without endangering the health of the inhabitants. One gentleman seems to have made a very practical suggestion, that the dead body should be cut up into pieces, which might then be removed and disposed of in the way in which the dead bodies of cattle and other animals were dealt with; but this idea was pooh-poohed by the rest of the "council." The authorities again put their heads together, and resolved to adopt means to drag the remains out of the town, and with that object thought of pulling down one of the walls within which the animal had been "cribb'd, cabin'd, and confined." Hundreds of coolies and several carts were pressed into service, and so were a number of carpenters, iron-smiths, and other artisans engaged to construct a huge car on wheels to convey the dead animal. But all to no purpose. Notwithstanding that cranes and other available machinery were brought into requisition, the dead animal, which weighed several tons, could not be lifted and much less removed from the place where it was. All sorts of attempts were made for three days together, but they failed one after the other. In the meantime, owing to the intense heat of the weather, the body soon began to decompose, and emitted such a sickening smell that it made it impossible for people to stand near it. When the authorities saw that they were baffled in all their endeavours to remove the body, they resolved to adopt the suggestion made at the outset by a practical man, and eventually caused the dead animal to be cut into pieces, which were then buried at a short distance from the place. When the body was submitted to the operation, it gave out such sickening smells that Ranee Jumabai, the adopted mother of H.H. the Gaekwar of Baroda, who lived in the neighbourhood, had to shift into another bungalow near the railway station.

INDIA'S REAL NEEDS.

(Indian Engineering.)

SIR,—In those "good old times" of which old-minded Britons incline to speak with veneration, times when the prosperity of the nation was held to depend altogether on its agriculture, when there was no Lancashire mills, and Birmingham was unheard of, and mining, even in collieries, was conducted on a very primitive scale—Great Britain's claims to greatness rested on very insecure and illusory foundations, so modern thinkers are agreed. To development of industries, expansions of trade and the wealth and varied culture these bring in their train they attribute the proud place and power now held by England in the comity of European nations. Economically considered, India is much in the position England was in 300 years ago, when all interests had to be subordinated to agriculture, women and their distaffs and needles assumed to fill the place now occupied by mills and manufactories, trade with foreign countries was of the most meagre and desultory description, national industries were yet in embryo. If India is to be regenerated as the England of traditional good old times has been, is to be made prosperous as England is, it must be by means of industrial production, development of natural resources, trade expansions. This is the urgent need, the manifest work, of to-day. Manhood Suffrage, the Ballot, and an Indian Parliament can afford to wait till to-morrow.

Let ardent supporters of that political flummery called the National Congress take heed to the lessons of history; take care lest in pursuing a shadow they lose substantialities; remember it is true that history repeats itself.

Bombay, thanks in great measure to Parsee enterprise and commercial ability, has made more than a beginning of the application of Indian talents to other than political platforms. Its mills are so successful that Lancashire is jealous of them, afraid of their competition. Its commerce, largely controlled by Indian capitalists, is steadily expanding and increasing in value. It is a power in the Empire, because it has had foresight to seize, and sense to improve upon, industrial and commercial opportunities. Two of its Native citizens have won baronetcies as well as handsome fortunes, and honour amongst their fellow-men.

Cawnpore a generation ago was remarkable only as the scene of the darkest tragedy of the Indian Mutiny. Now it is a factor in Indian civilisation, politically influential, also, because of its trade in country produce of sorts, and its indigenous and applied manufactures.

The Honourable Doorgachurn Law, C.I.E., a member of the local Government's Council, is perhaps the most conspicuous example in Bengal of the political uses a business career may be made to serve, and of the value of commercial pursuits as stepping stones to honour as well as usefulness in public life.

Such different, far apart trade centres as Bombay, Cawnpore, and Calcutta furnish typical illustrations of trade pursuits leading to participation of one sort and another in the best political life of our times, and to the honours and rewards specially dear to Indian ambition. I should like Indian aspirants after fame of the sort that could be worn in provincial parliaments and debating clubs to consider whether the object they have in view will not be more likely to gain furtherance from advancement of their country's material progress than it ever could from any possible amount of borrowed and necessarily alien platitudes spouted on Mofussil platforms or penned in the office of a newspaper.

I should like to see them directing their energies and attention to revenue-returning industries rather than infructuous politics, to mining, and development of the country's resources rather than high-falutin, to Railway construction, roads and communications, for lack of which their country's advancement is hindered infinitely more than any political disabilities under which it may labour.

I should like them to consider science a more important study than grammar, to deem technical education more to be desired for the masses than a franchise they would not know what to do with if they got it. In brief, I desire practicality in lieu of vague unsettling generalities that are of their very nature more or less en l'air; and although appearances at first sight appear to militate against the triumph of utilitarian views, I am by no means inclined to despair of it.

Misdirected as well as imperfectly assimilated Western world teachings must be held accountable for much of the wrong bias this writing deplores, and would fain divert to legitimate and beneficial channels. And signs and tokens are not wanting, if one will look below the surface of things that the shrewdness underlying all Indian character has been to a certain extent awakened to better understanding of veritable and real national requirement, possible utilitarian developments, a judicious employment of its talents. Friends of India who are anxious to help forward such makings for good in the Indian character, the national life, must not be afraid to speak plain truths in season, even when such truths are unpalatable to dilettante reformers.

ECONOMIST.

BURMA P.W.D. ESTIMATES—1890-91.

(Indian Engineering.)

In the P.W.D. Budget Estimates for 1890-91, framed for the new territory in Burma, Imperial Military Works naturally and necessarily take a prominent place. Rs. 15,00,000 is the sum allotted for those that will be carried out entirely by the Military Works Department, fortifications, and so forth, and Rs. 11,43,000 are to be spent by other than military agencies on such works as Native Infantry Barracks, which are all reported urgent works, the temporary barracks, now occupied by the troops being in a ruinous condition. Officers' Quarters, too, are much needed; Hospitals more so; and in Cantonments and their neighbourhoods drainage and conservancy works, the reclamation of swamps, and the construction of roads, are all urgencies, the need for hurrying on which is obvious.

For Irrigation and Navigation Rs. 3,00,000 are allowed—not an extravagant sum. It includes the cost of completion of the Mu Canal Irrigation Scheme, 1st section (Shwebo to Indaw River), 30 miles; a survey of Kyaukse district, and a long list of improvements, repairs, tank maintenances and minor works. Navigation and Agricultural Works absorb Rs. 1,15,980.

The changing conditions of Upper Burma make Budget-making for it more than ordinarily difficult. After alterations the final Budget has been prepared for a total grant of Rs. 29,00,000. Colonel Cumming, R.E., the P.W.D. Secretary, says, apologetically, that the grant set apart for Civil Buildings is unavoidably large. He says, also, and we note it with satisfaction, that in order to the provision of additional funds for communications, expenditure on buildings will be kept as low as is consistent with efficiency and stable economy. Meanwhile, Court Houses, Jails, Treasuries, Hospitals, Post Offices, Telegraph Offices, School Buildings, Rest-houses are indispensable.

We are glad to see the matter of road extension, raising, and metalling receiving a fair share of attention, and showing progress. The bridging of existent roads is being pushed forward.

Local Funds in Upper Burma are to get Rs. 95,000 for Civil Works; some districts are favoured with reserves "for unforeseen repairs." We note that out of the Rs. 95,000 Mandalay and Kyaukse get Rs. 25,000 a-piece.

Lower Burma's Military Works Budget Estimate for the year amounts to Rs. 4,00,000 for those in charge of the Military Department; to those not transferred to it is apportioned a sum of Rs. 1,50,750. Some of these works will, of course, yield something in the way of interest derived from rent, sale of old materials, refunds, fines, &c.; but the sum total is trifling from an Imperial point of regard. Military Offices are, we note, approximately estimated to cost Rs. 80,000; which, relatively to more urgent demands on the public purse, seems to us a large sum to expend just now, under that heading.

Lower Burma's estimated expenditure on Civil Works—buildings, communications, improvements, establishment, tools and plant is Rs. 1,82,200. From this amount we find Rs. 55,300 deducted for "expenditure in England," and Rs. 24,900 for "loss by exchange." Why these sums should be deducted we fail to see. Expenditure on Indian P.W.D. account, whether incurred in England, in Asia, or in America, is still Indian P.W.D. expenditure; and loss by exchange is a loss it actually suffers, and can no more claim credit for not having suffered than any other Indian Department.

HOW TO MAKE A POLITICAL.

(Bombay Gazette.)

["Political duties may be learnt in a week, or a fortnight at most."
—Vernacular Paper.]

We know that in India the ordinary rules

That apply to the gathering of knowledge,
As, for instance, a long preparation in schools,

With a finishing sojourn at college,

Are often inverted by those who contend

That pure ignorance generally pays in the end.

The best mental soil, these enthusiasts bellow,

Is the soil that has long lain entirely fallow.

For instance, you want an unprejudiced view,

Full of light and of leading, in one sense,

On Indian affairs, go ask of the crew

Of Globe-trotters, licentiates of nonsense.

But avant, ye officials! proud sinners who pass

Your whole lives in acquiring the fame of the ass,

Being both obstinate, ignorant, and heaven knows what!

But good sound authorities, certainly not.

'Pon honour, I sometimes can scarcely refrain

From lampooning each babbling apostle

Of the creed that the best way true knowledge to gain

Is to cultivate ignorance colossal.

But I might have contented myself with mere curses,

Except for the wrath which we know maketh verses,

The same being excited at this application

Of a damnable doctrine to a new situation.

'Tis the very pernicious spread of the views

Of the Radical critics who goad us,

That excites me, else had I said to my muse,

"Hic non est talis vindice nodus."

But I cannot help feeling a shock of surprise

At encountering these terrible heresies

Trotted out to adorn the Native Press,

A power which I greatly respect, I confess.

There is nothing more shocking, sadly profane

Than attacks on the mysteries eternal

Of that glorious Department where splendidly reign

The pacific old Major and Colonel.

I cannot believe, I dare not suppose,

That they, with their fingers applied to their nose,

Have for ages sustained in the pages of history

A fallacious belief in political mystery.

It pains me to learn on the highest authority
That the recognised tests are exploded,
And a man may succeed by mere seniority
If his mind is quite uncorroded
By experience, study, or initiation
In the singular arts of diplomatic persuasion.
In short, that although it takes years to learn Greek
You can become a proficient P. A. in a week.

As for tests and apprenticeship to any style
Of ruling, we justly deride 'em ;
In fact, we're so thoroughly versatile
That we jest at "ne ultra crepidam."
The Post Office turns out the cream of Collectors,
And Revenue Judges haven't any detractors,
Which bears out the view that for each high position
Experience is the most damning condition.

This may be quite true, and it has its own charm ;
I feel that it's rash to deny it !
But there's something about it may well cause alarm
When we generally come to apply it.
A man may be permitted to doubt (with respect)
Whether theories of this kind needs must be correct,
Since we find that some knowledge, in most occupations,
Is treated among the chief qualifications.

It is true that political duties are such
That one dreads to define them, repenté ;
And some folk, they say, know as little or much
Of these secrets in one year as twenty.
Because they (as I guess) failed to see what the Art meant
For which you can't rightly blame the department.
Such exceptions, I need scarcely add, prove the rule,
That a Political Officer is never a fool.

Yet those Staff Corps exotics, through long weary days,
Labour at the mysterious arcana
Of etiquette, rajahs, codes, gaudy displays,
The places of Chief and retainer,
The width of a carpet, the pitch of a tent,
The drainage of fields, and systems of rent,
With all other details a Government critical,
Expects to be found in a perfect political.

Then Aitchison's treaties, and full and undress,
Have all to be dealt with and mastered,
With annual reports, the art of redress,
And resumé of all scandals last heard.
With a habit of smiling a vacuous smile,
Or wearing a thoughtful expression the while,
Some potentate asks, with a watery eye,
Whether "ap ka nizaj" is then "accha hai ?"

It is graces like these which turn out complete
The diplomat, perfect, profundus,
Skilled in the labyrinths of all Court deceit,
Homo teres atque rotundus—
Not less at his ease in his sudden alarms
(Theoretically) than in designing new farms,
A man, in effect, though to peace rather partial,
With the style and the uniform of a Field Marshal.

Such a man you may make at enormous expense,
You may make, you may break or deface him ;
But you'll never persuade me that there's any sense
In thinking that you can replace him,
In less than a week, by a stroke of the pen !
You cannot put Humpty together again—
As all other crafts, you must go far to seek
A Perfect Political made in a week.

BENGAL.

A CALCUTTA paper congratulates the tea-planters of the Western Dooras on the Secretary of State having sanctioned the proposed railway from Julpaiguri to Pundu Chelsa and Dam Dim. It is expected that a start will shortly be made with the earthwork, and that construction will be pushed forward as the season admits, with the object of completing the line early next year.

THE Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, writes an up-country paper, are apparently determined to have direct communication of their own with the eastern coast at an early date. One of their engineers has just completed a survey of the country between Sambalpur and Cuttack, and his report is favourable to the construction of a line between these two places. It would be some 180 miles in length, and a short connecting branch would have to be made northwards, to Panchpara from Sambalpur, which is not actually on the main line. The route to be followed would be along the valley of the Brahmani River for a considerable distance, skirting the road which connect Cuttack and Puri with the inland towns. A considerable pilgrim traffic would be secured by this line, while the grain tracts of the Central Provinces would be brought in touch with Orissa and Ganjam. The project is one which might well be carried out simultaneously with the building of the East Coast Railway.

RINDERPEST, in the hill stations of the Punjab, writes the Englishman, appears to be much more virulent among cattle than on the plains. There is said to be no diminution in the intensity of the malady, even when it is always domiciled in a district, and it is not an unusual thing for all the cattle in a village to be attacked and only about 2 per cent. to recover. The stables in which the people keep their cattle are so overcrowded and badly ventilated that it is impossible, when one animal is affected, for the others to escape. In the majority of cases the zemindar shuts up the affected animal in the stable during the day, and drives the rest of his cattle in during the night. Moreover, the malady makes its appearance in a very insidious manner, and people do not realise that anything is wrong until many cattle become ill. In this way the whole cattle of a village are exposed to contagion, and the rough measures of segregation which have been tried by the people have been found of no effect, and have fallen into disrepute. If the subject is broached to them they laugh at it, and say they have had much experience of it, and know it to be useless. Finding segregation useless, they have recourse to other measures, such as the propitiation of demons, the intercession of chelas, and the like. On the plains the heat is very prejudicial to the rinderpest virus, and in June and July it either dies out or is greatly weakened.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Mail writes:—We are glad to learn that the Government of India has, in deference to official and public opinion in Madras, postponed the consideration of the Madras Small Cause Court Bill, which was to have been passed on July 1. This decision is only what might have been reasonably expected under the circumstances.

WITH effect from the first of July next, the first, second and intermediate class fares of the North-Western Railway will be reduced respectively to one anna, six pies, and three pies per mile. From the same date the return tickets in through-booking with foreign lines will be issued at two single fares, instead of a fare and a half as at present.

A GENERAL meeting of all the R.E. officers stationed at Madras was held at the Madras Club on Friday evening, when it was resolved to invite subscriptions from all Royal Engineer officers serving in the Madras command, towards the erection of some permanent memorial of the late Major L. Langley, who died at Kullar, in the Nizam's Dominions, on the 18th ultimo, from the effects of wounds received whilst tiger-shooting. Colonel Burton presided, and informed those present of all the particulars relating to the death of the above-mentioned gallant officer, a notice of which appeared in our issue of the 24th ultimo. Major Langley was buried in the cemetery at Bezwodra.

BOMBAY.

(June 6.)

MR. J. P. ORR, C.S., is appointed to do duty as Assistant Collector, Thana.

MR. E. M. H. FULTON has proceeded on special duty to hear certain cases connected with the Palitana State.

THE inhabitants of the Native State of Gondal presented, in a public meeting assembled, an address last week to Rao Bahadur Gunness Govind, the State Engineer, on his departure from Gondal, after twenty years' service. The address was presented in a silver case, bearing a suitable inscription. During the twenty years that he had been in the service of the State Rao Bahadur Gunness had designed and constructed many superb and stately buildings in connection with the Public Works Department, of which he was the head.

At the Esplanade Police-court on Saturday, Pestonjee Muncherjee Mody, on whose premises a fire occurred in Apollo-street in November last, was charged before Mr. Cooper by Mr. Symington, the secretary of the Queen Insurance Company, with cheating that company in reference to the value of the goods said to have been in his shop at the time the premises were destroyed by fire. The complainant having been briefly examined by Mr. Craigie, who represented the defendant, in reference to the information he received from a man named Bondman, and his inquiries at the National Bank, the case was adjourned until the 17th inst.

THE enterprising Parsee traveller, Mr. Jehangir H. Kothari, has returned from his second tour round the world to Bombay. On this journey Mr. Kothari has traversed 55,278 miles, including sea voyages of a total of 5½ months' duration, 12,170 miles by railway and 400 miles in diligences and on foot. In the course of his travels he visited North Cape in 72° North latitude, and cruised in the Southern Ocean to 60° South. His experiences of distant and picturesque portions of the globe are probably unique among his countrymen. The whole of his long tour was accomplished under the arrangements of Messrs. Thomas Cook and Son, Bombay.

THE death of a leper in Bombay the other day under deplorable circumstances, says the Englishman, serves to show the amount of mischief that may result from the want of a little practical common sense. The poor leper was turned into the street by his brother, and being found by the police in a dying state was carted to a hospital where he was refused admission, which, perhaps, was all right and proper according to the rules of hospitals. Then the police, unable to get their burden off their hands, took the leper from place to place, till he died in the bullock-cart in which he was being carried about. The sorrow and horror which the event has excited need not cause surprise. The unnatural brother not being under authority, and there being no one else to hang, public sentiment is busy with devices to prevent the recurrence of such a shocking experience. But among propositions to hurry on the Trombay Leper Asylum and to revive the Leper Bill, we miss any practical suggestion which would once for all make such an outrage impossible. A dying man, who for any reason whatever is refused admission into the hospitals ought to be provided immediately with food and shelter in any city calling itself civilised; and if the Deputy Commissioner of Police, or even a Superintendent, cannot be trusted to act in an emergency and hire a hut or a shed for the purpose, the fault lies in red tape. One is reminded of the state of things that Lord Wolseley found in the military hospital at Cairo after the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. The wounded soldiers were tormented all day long by swarms of flies, pending the arrival of a consignment of fans from England, which had gone astray. Meanwhile the Arabs boys in the streets were selling whisks at a nominal price. Lord Wolseley gave one glance at the wounded soldiers, and made an effectual demonstration.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB

THE defence works commenced at Attock having been completed for the present, the office of Major Shone, Executive Engineer, has received orders for its removal to Rawalpindi to take up the work of constructing the grand wall around Rawalpindi from 1st June next.

THE Rawalpindi cantonment water-works have not yet been commenced, although the necessary surveys, &c., were finished some time ago. The military authorities desired to have the entire work of the water-supply placed in charge of the Executive Engineer Military Works, but as the Municipal Committee will not agree, the matter has been referred to Government; hence the delay.

THE Lahore paper hears that owing to his weak state of health—the result of a severe attack of influenza—Mr. Mackworth Young has been strongly advised by the doctors to give himself entire rest from work, and change out of India. He proceeds on leave to England in July. The question of his successor as second Financial Commissioner of the Punjab is under consideration.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says that the controversies as to the nomination of a successor to Sir Syed Ahmed in the secretaryship of the M. A. O. College, which have been disturbing the customary harmony that exists among the Aligarh authorities, are finally composed, and the nomination of Mr. Justice Mahmud of Allahabad as the Seyd's successor-designate is cordially and generally accepted.

THE Punjab Government has agreed to lend six lakhs at 5 per cent. to the Delhi Municipality, for the execution of the water-works scheme now in progress. The balance of 4½ lakhs will be met by the Municipality from money saved in past years for the purpose. The loan of six lakhs will be repaid in 20 years with interest, by yearly payments of Rs. 48,000. It is confidently expected that the water-works will be completed by March, 1892.

WITH reference to the working of municipalities in the Punjab during the last year the Lieutenant-Governor remarks:—"Reviewing the province as a whole, it seems clear that in many of the smaller municipalities a want of energy and public spirit on the part of members is still noticeable, as might be expected. In some cases local factions have disturbed the harmony of the proceedings. The Lahore Municipal Committee was not free from blame in this respect, though the differences of opinion which existed were not all unreasonable."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

"THE BONDMAN."

"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord"—not, it may be, in a way to consist with man's poor feeble limited ideas of justice and right, but in such manner as is best fitted to the circumstances of the case. At times judgment is summary and severe—"an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth"; at others, leniency takes the place of harshness, and coals of fire are heaped upon the head of him who, anticipating no compassion, finds the stream of mercy unquenched and perennial.

Such is the foundation upon which Mr. Hall Caine builds the fabric of one of the most powerful romances of the present decade. From every point of view the work has sustained—nay, more, advanced—the high reputation which its talented author has already won by his earlier efforts in the realms of fiction. As regards interest, it is not too much to say that from the first chapter to the last there is not a single page which is not replete with scenes bristling with excitement—scarce, indeed, is there a line but what arrests the reader's attention; and yet, withal, there is an utter absence of that morbid, unhealthy, and sickly improbability which characterises the modern novel. From end to end there is not a single "situation" which, in the faintest degree, violates the ordinary routine of daily life. It is true that contrary winds blow opportunely at critical times of vital import; it is undeniable that storms come haply, when without their assistance the plot of the tale could not be developed in fitting propriety. It must be admitted that revolutions, volcanic eruptions and such like abnormal circumstances are all enlisted in the service of the gifted and imaginative author. But all this does not in the least degree detract from the merit of the tale; indeed, such license is not only allowable, but necessary. Without it any and every work of fiction must be "flat, stale, and unprofitable." Even Rasselas could not form a pattern for all successors to Dr. Johnson in the art of "fancy free."

Then, again, the knowledge of human nature—at all times deep and penetrating—displayed at every turn is never allowed to vex the reader. Of long, dry, theoretical harangues there are none; of short, pithy sentences, embodying in a few lines the experience of a lifetime, there are innumerable instances, tending at once to enchant the thoughtful, and explain the current of events which otherwise might, perchance, seem inexplicable, and contrary to ordinary expectations.

Finally, the characters are not only portrayed with a master-hand, but they are full of life. They attract, they repel; but they never weary. Sometimes we fall down and worship; at others we grind our teeth in rage and vexation of soul; and lastly, but in importance supremely firstly, the grand and little-headed truth stands forth, written, as we think, in letters that will resist the ravages of time—that in every creature of God's hand, no matter how debased, how shipwrecked may be the poor struggling humanity which clogs the soul, there is a potentiality of good, a power for better things which none can limit, none can quench, but which all can encourage and all can develop. This is the keynote of "The Bondman," a work which read once for pleasure—and pleasure it is—may be perused again and again for comforting instruction. This is Mr. Caine's mission in the world of letters—a mission of a noble mind to a thoughtless, giddy, yet, haply, well-meaning and high-minded nation amongst the peoples of Christendom.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

INDIAN ARMY REFORM.—II.

In our leader of June 9th we noticed the Despatch, dated June 1st, 1888, from the Government of India to the Secretary of State, renewing the proposals which had been made by the Commission of 1879, of which the late Sir Ashley Eden was chairman, for the abolition of the "Presidential System" of the Indian Armies, and the substitution for it of four armies under one Commander-in-Chief. To this Despatch the Secretary of State replied by telegram on August 8th 1888, to the effect that to enable him to come to a definite conclusion it was essential that he should first have, in complete and fully detailed form, a draft of the orders which the Government of India proposed issuing in giving effect to the measures it recommended. Also drafts of all the orders to be thereon issued by the Commander-in-Chief for all arrangements in minute detail; postings, divisions of staff, distribution of regiments and officers, &c., for all four corps, but with special reference to the division of the Bengal Army into distinct corps. It was enjoined that the proceedings should be kept strictly confidential, as being only preliminary to the consideration of the measure at home; and it was further requested that the information asked for should be given as soon as possible, "with a view to the early consideration of the proposal."

On the receipt of this telegram the Government of India lost little time in complying with the Secretary of State's urgent demand for early information. On October 15th, 1888, it submitted a Draft of the General Order, with appendices and subsidiary orders of the Commander-in-Chief, such as appeared to it to provide completely for all the different matters necessary to be dealt with in carrying out the great change it had under contemplation. In this Despatch, which was signed by Lord Dufferin, Sir F. Roberts, General Chesney, Sir C. U. Aitchison, Sir C. Elliott, and Messrs. Scoble and Westland, reference was made to various former despatches on the subject, stating the aim which the Government of India had in view was, while securing the perfect unity of control by placing the supreme command of the whole Indian Army under one authority, to provide at the same time for a decentralisation of business by investing all the parties concerned with a due proportionate share of authority and responsibility. It was urged that a sound and vigorous system of army administration could be arrived at only by securing that each Department, from the highest to the lowest, should have its adequate share of work and no more, and that at no one point in the administrative chain should there be an undue stress of work or a congestion of business by reason of an excessive convergence of responsibility on that point. And the despatch went on to say:—

"The present system undoubtedly fails in this respect. The congestion takes place in the Military Department of the Government of India, as well as at army headquarters, as a chronic state of things in peace time, but still more in time of war. The experience of the last ten years, especially of the Afghan War, and even during the smaller expeditions which have taken place, shows that, in the event of any large operations having to be undertaken, these Departments would be overweighted with business to an embarrassing extent. This is partly due to the complexity of procedure involved in the Presidential system, and is partly a consequence of the procedure handed down from past times, under which the Government of India has remained the only authority competent to sanction expenditure, however petty, or any departure from rule, however trifling. The result is, that with the increase in every part of the business of the Army which has taken place of recent years more and more work has been thrown on the Military Department of the Government of India. The remedy for this one cause of this evil will be applied by the abolition of the Presidential system; that for the other will be effected by the change of system indicated in the General Order—of delegating a greater degree of responsibility and power to the different Army authorities and Departments. We believe that the changes now contemplated will produce the desired effect without diminishing to any appreciable extent the effective supreme financial and administrative control of the Government of India."

This is plain and comprehensive enough. But to make the object which the Viceroy and his colleagues had in view still plainer it was noted that "over centralisation" would be an evil in this system, and one, therefore, to be guarded against. This they proposed to do by delegating responsibility on certain clearly defined lines, by giving certain specific powers to Lieutenant-Generals commanding armies, and to the several executive heads of departments:—"By giving greater latitude we diminish petty references, while by interesting all parties in the economical administration of the Army, the task of the Government of India will, we hope, be sensibly lightened. Whereas, at present, all the authorities, except the Supreme Government itself, are only concerned in suggesting fresh expenditure, they will, under the proposed arrangements, be responsible for combining efficiency with economy, while the greater latitude allowed will facilitate the despatch of public business, and afford leisure to the higher administrative authorities for exerting a more searching control over the important branches of expenditure."

So far, the arguments of the Government of India, as put forward by Lord Dufferin and his counsellors, appear to be unanswerable; but they are further strengthened by a separate despatch from Lord Dufferin himself as Viceroy, which we shall refer to in our next notice of these important papers.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.

As an undesigned contribution in aid of our efforts to direct the attention of investors to British, rather than foreign fields wherein to sow their savings and capital, we may cite a portion of the "Other People's Money" article in the last number of Vanity Fair. On page 544 the Financial Editor—yielding, apparently unwillingly, to pressing queries from his clients—sets out the results of his investigations into the position and prospects of thirteen Indian Tea Companies. This useful task has evidently been done with some care; and, so far as it goes, is of service in the direction that we have urged investors to search on their own behalf. Many of our readers will, however, be already acquainted with, say, a score more of the Indian Tea Companies, the returns from which are as good, or better than those cited by our noted contemporary. Nevertheless, we welcome this new light that has dawned on one of the best of the financial advisers of the day; though he also is, in our opinion, unduly inclined towards investment under alien flags, from Egypt to California, from American rails to African Land and Trust Companies. The returns cited in case of the Indian Companies he has subjected to scrutiny are not such as to inspire "dreams of avarice," ranging, as they do, from 6 to 10 per cent. But, then, this is much better than many of the light and variable sheaves precariously reaped in foreign fields; while the concerns in question are under British law, and managed by British hands or heads.

THE BURMA DINNER.

On Wednesday last the Annual Burma Dinner came off at the Marlborough Rooms, Regent-street, and was a great success. Upwards of one hundred gentlemen, officials, and non-officials connected with Burma present or past were present, Sir Rivers Thompson occupying the chair, and Mr. R. Stewart, of Messrs. Wyllie and Co., the vice-chair. After the usual loyal toasts were given Sir Rivers Thompson in a telling speech gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to Burma," which was, of course, drunk enthusiastically by all. Speeches were also made by Sir C. Bernard, Sir H. Prendergrast, Sir H. Cunningham, Mr. A. P. Macdonnell, Mr. Jardine, and others; and all who had rendered or were rendering eminent service in Burma were not forgotten, except, by the way, the late Dr. E. Forchhammer, whose name or good work and works found no mention in any of the addresses of the speakers of the evening. One of the best—if not the best speech—was that of Mr. R. Stewart, who, in proposing the health of the Chairman, said:—

Gentlemen,—The duties of your Vice-President are few and simple; but, by your courtesy and tradition, he possesses certain privileges, and it is one of these which, on the present occasion, I am not only unwilling to forego, but which, indeed, I have now risen expressly to claim the privilege I mean of proposing to you the health of the President of the evening. Let me say, too, that I consider your permission to do this not only as a privilege, but also as an honour, and that my sense of the honour is not lessened—it is strengthened and increased—when I think of the men who have preceded Sir Rivers Thompson in the chair which he most worthily occupies to-night. Naturally and at once my mind reverts, and I think the minds of many of us must revert, to Sir Arthur Phayre, the great first Chief Commissioner of Burma—the man who more than any other laid the foundations and helped to rear and consolidate the fabric and superstructure of British administration in that splendid province—a man, moreover, who to many remarkable and statesmanlike gifts and qualities added a strange, a singular, grace and charm, which drew all men to him, and which were never seen to better advantage, which were never more clearly or delightfully illustrated than upon the many occasions on which he presided over our annual assemblies. Then I think of Sir Ashley Eden, more than once our president, a bold, self-reliant, and capable administrator, of whom, alas! inexorable fate too soon deprived us. I think also of Sir Charles Bernard, who on the last two occasions gave us the benefit of his excellent and most genial services in the chair, and whom we are delighted to see again amongst us to-night. And, gentlemen, I am sure that I shall faithfully interpret your feelings as to what is right and fitting when, before parting from the past, I say, in a word, that we all remember to-night, with deepest sorrow, that since we last met here our old friend, companion, and vice-president, Sir Edward Sladen, has passed into the silent land, and when I express our regard for his memory, and our true sympathy with those whom he left behind. I now turn to my more immediate subject, the health of our President, Sir Rivers Thompson. Gentlemen, I have enjoyed the acquaintance, perhaps he will allow me to say, in some slight degree the friendship, of Sir Rivers for more years than either of us, I daresay, now cares to recall; and though, speaking in his presence I may not, I suppose I must not, say many things about him, which otherwise I would be glad to say; still, keeping always within the bounds of strict accuracy and moderation, I may at least say this—that throughout his whole career Sir Rivers has borne a high and a spotless reputation, and that not only as an able and distinguished official, who has filled with credit and success many of the highest and most important situations in the Indian Government, but also as a straightforward, modest, independent, courageous, and loyal man, Sir Rivers has been loyal to his service. He has been loyal and devoted to the people over whom he has been called upon to rule, and he has been loyal also to his own countrymen—the last named a fact of which he gave conspicuous and convincing proof a few years ago, when, at a time of great public excitement and, in my judgment, of some public danger, he, at much risk to himself, rose from his sick bed, and, from his place in the Supreme Council of India, strenuously defended the just rights and liberties of his fellow-countrymen in India, which were then in peril. We need not doubt that so long as the destinies of the great provinces of India are entrusted—and I believe they always will be entrusted—to the hands of such men as Sir Rivers Thompson, as others whom I have named to-night, and as yet others whom I have not named but whom I see amongst us, the progress of these Provinces in the direction of comfort, development and prosperity will be well assured; for in the fact that such men are at the helm, there lies the best, the most reliable and undeniable security that the administration will be conducted upon the principles of strict and equal justice, of untiring devotion to the State, and of ceaseless care for the welfare of all classes of the community. When we asked Sir Rivers to preside over us this evening we desired not only to record our sense of the value of his services to Burma, but also to show him such honour as we could; and he, on his part, conferred honour upon us when he accepted the invitation. And now, gentlemen, it only remains that, speaking in your name and by your authority, I should offer to Sir Rivers our hearty thanks for his services in the chair, together with our congratulations on the improvement in his health, which has permitted him to be with us to-night. We earnestly trust that, as time passes, his health may become even stronger and more assured; and we trust, also, that opportunities may not, in the future, be denied him of continuing to promote the interests of that great Indian Empire, in the security and advancement of which we are all so deeply concerned, and which, already, he has served so long, so faithfully, and so well. I give you the health of the Chairman.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

THE reward for passing an examination in the Biluchi language by the Higher Standard has been reduced to Rs. 500 from Rs. 800.

THE defence works commenced at Attock having been completed for the present, the office of Major Shone, Executive Engineer, has received orders for its removal to Rawal Pindi, to take up the work of constructing the grand wall around Rawal Pindi from 1st June next.

THE services of Lieutenant-Colonel R. L. H. Curteis, commanding the 2nd Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment, Madras Establishment, have been placed at the disposal of the Government of Bombay. He will succeed Colonel Dundas as Assistant Adjutant-General at Poona.

THE General Officer commanding the Burma District has issued an order that field service with the Chin-Lushai columns shall be considered ended on the 30th April, but that troops moving in the country after that date will receive free rations.

It is officially notified that officers of heavy, garrison and mounted batteries of Royal Artillery and of Infantry are not eligible for appointment to a Native Cavalry regiment after they attain the age of 23 years. Officers of Horse Artillery, British Cavalry and Field Artillery will, however, be eligible up to the age of 25 years.

CAPTAIN COLLINGWOOD TOWNSEND, R.A., of the Gun-Carriage Factory of Bombay, has just passed the examination for a certificate as a mechanical engineer under the Boiler Act. The fact is worthy of mention, as Captain Townsend is the only officer in the Ordnance Department, and it is believed in the Army as well, who has passed this thoroughly practical test.

In issuing the standard of musketry percentages for the Native Army the Adjutant-General remarks in General Orders:—"Commanding officers should bear in mind that although the figure of merit is thus specially singled out, the results which it records by no means cover the whole field of musketry of efficiency. They should therefore be careful to impress upon the subordinates that fire discipline and control, together with several of the more practical exercises which are excluded from the figure of merit and estimated independently, do not on this account carry any the less weight in determining the shooting value of a corps and its general musketry efficiency."

THE Commander-in-Chief has directed that all detachment and riding horses of Royal Horse Artillery and Royal Artillery shall for six months be left unshod on the hind feet, except in special cases of horses with low healed flat soft feet, of which there may be some 4 or 5 per cent. In these cases the shoes can be applied at the discretion of officers commanding, under the advice of the Veterinary Surgeon in charge. In addition to the set of store shoes a second pair of hind shoes, properly fitted, ready for immediate use, will be kept up for each horse left unshod. A full report of the trial will be furnished to the Inspector-General of Artillery in India by December 1st, 1890.

THE result of the official inquiry into the charges of alleged neglect of Punjabi coolies under Lieutenant Smyth, Royal Irish Regiment, while at Calcutta en route from the Punjab to Burma, last winter, is to exonerate Lieutenant Smyth. While admitting that his reports on the subject were highly coloured, and not borne out by the facts and medical testimony furnished to the Court of Inquiry, the Government of India concur with the Commander-in-Chief that there was no neglect of coolies at Calcutta; that the sickness, which existed before embarkation, and was developed after embarkation, was attributable to causes unconnected with their stay at Calcutta; and that Lieutenant Smyth himself appears to have taken proper steps for the medical care of the coolies at Calcutta, where medical care was provided.

THE Government of India having decided that recoveries of rent for occupation of public quarters shall in future be effected in cash from military officers and others, regimental and staff officers have been requisitioned to effect the recoveries, and hand over the cash to Executive Engineers. This is a rather roundabout way of carrying out the orders of Government "for the recovery to be effected by the Executive Engineer on the spot." The Executive Engineer might collect the amount of rent, and only seek the aid of the military authorities in cases where he has failed to obtain it. Officers commanding Native Regiments, Batteries of British and Native Artillery, and Paymasters of Regiments have quite enough to do without becoming agents for the recovery of rents, which appears to be the legitimate work of the subordinates of the Executive Engineers.

A CONTEMPORARY says:—"The Secretary of State recently drew attention to the high prices paid for remounts for the first four regiments of Bombay Native Cavalry, and compared these high prices with the low prices paid by the three regiments of Sind Horse for their remounts. It appears that in the Bombay Presidency, outside of Sind, country-bred horses of the stamp required are not procurable in any numbers, and imported Arabs and Persians have to be purchased, any reduction in the price of which is scarcely feasible. We hear, however, that the Government of Bombay has suggested the possibility of the first four regiments of the Bombay Native Cavalry obtaining suitable country-bred remounts from Sind at a cost of Rs. 200 each, plus the cost of rail and sea journey. It is believed that some suitable remounts might also be obtained from his Highness the Rao of Cutch's horse-breeding establishment at Bhuj."

THE Lahore paper observes:—"The Government of India is taking a new step in the matter of contracts for the supply of country-brewed malt liquor to British troops in this country. Messrs. Meakin and Company have lately submitted tenders in the Bombay Presidency, but the terms have been rejected by the Government of India, who have announced that the supply must be made under the following conditions:—The contract to be for five years; the Company to have no claim to compensation in cases where the troops prefer English malt liquor; Bombay and Deolali to be excluded from the contract; and an all-round rate of Rs. 48 per hogshead. It appears that Bombay and Deolali have a decided preference for imported beer; and though the Government of India rightly wishes to encourage local enterprise, it cannot do this at the expense of offending the local prejudices of Tommy Atkins. At Bombay and Deolali this warrior is inclined to 'hang the expense,' and insist upon imported brands."

THE result of the annual inspection in signalling of British troops in India for the year 1889-90 have been published. The return shows that eight regiments of cavalry, twenty-seven batteries of artillery, and forty-six battalions of infantry have been inspected, nearly all of which were classified. The figure of merit obtained by the 1st Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry places the regiment at the top of the list, and the Commander-in-Chief congratulates the regiment on its state of efficiency in signalling. His Excellency is pleased to see that the 7th Dragoon Guards have maintained their place at the head of the cavalry list, a position they obtained last year. The best battery is No. 13 Battery, Eastern Division, Royal Artillery, to whom much praise is due, as it had to work under adverse circumstances at Thayetmyo. The General Order on the subject concludes:—"His Excellency appreciates the interest taken generally in the signalling training of the troops, as evidenced by the results now published compared with those obtained last year. Sir Frederick Roberts, however, sees much room for improvement in the artillery, and trusts higher figures of merit will be obtained by them at the next inspection."

A GOOD BEGINNING.—The first spinning and weaving mill in Ceylon has now fairly started work. The Times of Ceylon says:—"We have just been shown the first fruits of the Wellawatte Cotton Mill in the shape of grey sheets, 8, 9, and 12½ lbs. unsized, as well as drills and towelling, which, so far as we can judge, are excellent in quality, and apparently equal to similar goods made elsewhere, though we have, of course, no expert knowledge on the subject. We believe the mill is now turning out cloth very steadily, mostly on orders for Chetties and others locally."

A SIND BABU'S COMPOSITION.—The Sind Babu can beat his prototype in Bengal in English composition:—"Honoured Sir—Last evening while peregrinating, throughout City, I am hearing from friend who was likewise enjoying evening Zephyrs, that vacancy took place to-day in your Highnesses office by death of Babu—Poor man, I am greatly sorrowful for his demise, he has left gigantic family who will feed their mouths the Devil knows. Your Honour will see from my ludicrous and weak hearted tone of voice that I am well meaning, hard working, extra energetic. Devil-me-care-sort requiring abundant fields for display of copious brain power hitherto limited by blaggard school master. For my qualifications please note, I am damnably well up in precise writing, draughting, Docking, and office rotine work, and in private life I am much addicted to swearing English oaths, drinking dam lots of pegs and other ramifications too numerous to detail. I am no orthodox believing all rotten superstitions of ancient forefathers, but I am Iconoclast destroying idols and such like to great detriment of hypocrites and dam scoundrels. It is with fervance that I solicit your majesty's hand and heart in moving this my petition to your own favourable condition and my wives heartfelt gratitude, who will all fall upon my bended knees and pray long and continuously for your mighty honour and honours gracious lady, and all your posthumous children to follow up."

MADRAS RAILWAY.

The annual general meeting of the shareholders in this company was held on June 16 at the Cannon-street Hotel, Mr. G. Noble Taylor in the chair. The report of the directors for the half-year ending December 31 stated that the gross revenue was £422,083, against £391,297 in the corresponding half of 1888, showing an increase of £30,786 or 7·87 per cent. The expenditure was £259,760, as compared with £231,062, being an increase of £28,698, or 12·42 per cent. The net revenue was £162,323, against £160,235 in 1888, an increase of £2,088. The chairman expressed satisfaction at the steady growth of the company's business. The quantities carried of the most important commodities were larger than in the corresponding half-year, and the goods traffic of the latest additions to their system continued to improve. The improvement in their third-class traffic was satisfactory, both as regarded numbers and receipts; the number was half a million larger, and the receipts £5,300 more, than for the corresponding period. The directors had agreed to raise the fares for the mail train between Madras and Bombay from two to three pence per mile, and they expected to reduce the time by five hours. The considerable increase in the working expenses of the locomotive department was chiefly owing to the higher cost of fuel, which, however, was summarily checked by arrangements made to secure good coal from Bengal in sufficient quantity and on favourable terms; if the arrangement was successful it would supersede the necessity of sending fuel from England, whereby a great saving would be effected. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report, which was agreed to.

THREE INDIAN RAILWAY MEETINGS.

Three Indian railway company meetings were held at Cannon-street Hotel on Friday afternoon. The first gathering was that of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. Mr. Watt presided, and in commenting upon the eighty-first report, said as compared with the corresponding six months in 1888 there had been a decrease in receipts to the amount of £158,358, or 10·38 per cent. This was chiefly due to the diminished exports of wheat and linseed from Bombay, owing to short crops in India, and to low prices. The traffic receipts to Wednesday last showed that they might expect an increase of £30,000 on this half-year's working as compared with the corresponding half-year in 1889. Provided that the working expenses did not exceed 44½ per cent., they would probably be able to propose at next meeting a dividend of 22s. per cent. in addition to the guaranteed dividend. In answer to a question, he said he thought that English coal could never be wholly supplanted by native fuel. The register now shows the number of proprietors to be 14,626.

Proprietors of the Indian Midland Railway had submitted to them the report of the directors. Mr. T. R. Watt, also chairman of this company, remarked that the line was one of the most cheaply made in India. It was only natural that during the first six months of the complete railway's existence the traffic should be poor; but they might expect from present appearances a bright future, and that at no far distant date. They were now on the best terms with the Baroda Company. Their capital account now showed a balance of £420,388.

Then followed the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway company meeting. Major-General Trevor said that on their own line and on the Rajputana-Malwa railway they had earned a little more and spent a little less than in the first six months of 1888. The increase was due to coaching traffic. The failure of crops last year had been very serious, but then there had been a considerable improvement in the cotton trade. This year on the Rajputana-Malwa they had lost nearly one-sixth of their gross earnings owing to the failure of grain and oil-seed traffic. So next January the dividend would have to be only £4 instead of £4 2s. 6d. paid in January last. They were doing their best to encourage the establishment of other lines to be worked as part of their system, and they hoped for indirect profits from these branches. A dividend making £6 17s. 6d. for the year was duly declared.

ACCIDENT ON THE MADRAS RAILWAY.

An accident that might have been attended with very serious results occurred on the South-West Line of the Madras Railway recently. The train was running at full speed about two miles from Verinjeepuram when it dashed into a large tree that had been blown across the line. From all accounts it appears that the driver of the engine saw a dark object in the line some distance ahead, and, not being able to make out exactly what it was, he applied the brakes and whistled to the guards to do the same. Owing to the speed at which the train was going, however, the brakes failed, we believe, to act—at least, the effect they produced was small—for, as we say, the train dashed into the tree, with the result that the large engine lamp was broken, and the safety valve was also broken, allowing the steam to escape, and more or less serious damage was caused to the engine and the carriages, while some of the splinters from the breaking branches of the tree struck several passengers in the train, but not, we are glad to say, causing any serious damage. After having tied down the safety valve and removed about half a ton of broken boughs that had collected on the cow-catcher and other parts, the train moved on, and arrived in Madras without further mishap. We learn, however, that this was not the only accident that occurred to this train during its journey from Bangalore, for it seems that, some time before midnight, another tree had been encountered on the line, but, owing to its being only a small one, it was struck off the rails by the cow-catcher.

In connection with these accidents, which happily were attended with no fatal results, there are two things to be remarked, viz., that trees should not be allowed to grow so close to the line that, in case of their being blown over, they obstruct the line to the imminent danger of passing trains and their human freight; and, secondly, that had some form of continuous brake been in use, such as the Westinghouse or Vacuum, no such accident as that reported above would have occurred, for owing to their power the progress of the train would have been arrested almost immediately. We learn that the train ran a great distance after the brakes had been applied.—Mail.

OBITUARY.

MR. EDWARD COLBORNE BABER.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs:—"Much regret is felt at Bhamo on account of the death there on the 16th inst. of Mr. Edward Colborne Baber." "By his death," says the Times, "Her Majesty's service in the East loses one of its most brilliant and gifted members. Mr. Baber's constitution never was very strong, and he succumbed, no doubt, to the effects of prolonged residence in unhealthy climates, and the hardships of the remarkable journeys by which he is best known to the outside world. Many who saw Mr. Baber during his last visit to this country two years ago, and who perceived the persistence with which ill-health clung to him, felt that the chances of his return from Bhamo were not very great."

Mr. Baber was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, and went out to China in 1866 as a student interpreter in the British Consular service. He acquired Chinese with more than the usual rapidity and thoroughness, and for some years went through the usual grades of official promotion. In 1875 his chance of distinction came. In the February of that year Mr. Margary, an officer of the Consular service in China, who was proceeding under Imperial passports to meet Colonel Browne's mission from Burma into China, was murdered at Manwyne, on the borders of the two countries. The circumstances surrounding this tragedy were so doubtful and suspicious that Sir Thomas Wade, then British Minister in Peking, despatched, for the purpose of inquiring into the matter, a mission under the late Mr. Grosvenor, and of this Mr. Baber was a member. The mission left Hankow, on the Yangtze, in November, 1875, reaching Tali-Fu in April, 1876, and Bhamo some time later. The route of the mission between Tali and Momien was described by Mr. Baber, and was subsequently published as a Blue-book. To use the words of Lord Aberdare, then President of the Royal Geographical Society, when presenting Mr. Baber with the Society's gold medal in 1883:—"This narrative, in spite of the disadvantage of making its appearance as a Blue-book, and therefore obtaining but a limited circulation, yet 'a fit audience found, though few,' and made European geographers acquainted with the fact that a geographical observer and narrator of remarkable power had appeared in the Far East." Subsequently the Chefoo Convention was signed with the Chinese Government, and under it a British official was permitted to reside in the town of Chungking, on the Upper Yangtze, for the purpose of studying the trade and trade routes of the region. It was in accordance with the fitness of things that Mr. Baber should have been the first officer appointed to this important and peculiar post, and it was while there that he carried out the series of explorations in Eastern Szechuen and the borders of Tibet which have made his name known to geographers all over the world, and which procured for him the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society. The peculiar value of these explorations to geography was that they connected the travels of the Baron von Richthofen and those of the brilliant but unfortunate Frenchman Francis Garnier. The record of these was subsequently published by the Royal Geographical Society in the first of its series of "Supplementary Papers." Speaking of these journeys on the occasion already referred to, Lord Aberdare, as the official representative of British geographers, said:—"Of these great services to geography I have given only the dry outlines. It is the merest justice to you to add that your journeys have been exceptionally productive, because of the exceptional store of various and accurate knowledge with which you started on your travels. Your mastery of the Chinese language, and of Chinese customs and habits of thought, enabled you to collect a great amount of miscellaneous information, which has been conveyed in narratives full of novelty, vivacity, and sustained interest. Altogether, both in these journeys and the report of their results, you have displayed the qualities of an accomplished traveller in a degree of which we have had few examples, and which fully justify our choice of you for sharing with Sir Joseph Hooker our highest distinction, even although you have, we firmly believe, only given the first fruits of that rich harvest which we expect from your matured powers and enlarged experience." Of the record itself the late Sir Henry Yule speaks of "that admirable and delightful narrative published in the spring of 1882 by the Royal Geographical Society, which the periodical Press has allowed to pass almost absolutely unnoticed, taking it, I suppose, for a Blue-book, because it is blue." The best accounts of the aboriginal tribes inhabiting the west and south-west of China is contained in this narrative, and the first Lo-lo manuscripts which reached Europe are believed to have come through Mr. Baber. It is to him also that we owe the account of the manufacture and trade in that curious produce, brick tea. In 1879 Mr. Baber was appointed to one of the most important posts in Her Majesty's service in China—namely, Chinese Secretary of the Legation at Peking, in succession to another very remarkable scholar, the late Mr. Mayers. In 1885 he was appointed Consul-General in Corea, and when the delimitation of the frontiers between Burma and China was expected to take place, in pursuance of the Burma convention of 1885, Mr. Baber was appointed political officer at Bhamo, on the upper Irrawaddy. The last official paper from his hands that has been published was a somewhat caustic criticism of the arrangements made for opening to trade what is called the "Ambassador's route" from Bhamo through the Shan States into China. His loss to the British service would be great at any time; it is specially so now, when the settlement of frontier questions in the region which he understood so well cannot be long deferred. Mr. Baber was about forty-five years of age at the time of his death.

THE appointment of Mr. A. C. Howard to the vacant Assistant-Commissionership has given, says the Daily News, universal satisfaction in the force. This gentleman not only appears to be popular in the police, but he has a thorough knowledge of the duties of the position to which he has been promoted, and his long and able service renders it especially fitting that he should be appointed to the post. Mr. Howard is the son of the late Mr. Andrew Howard of Kingmore, South Devon. He was educated privately, and nominated for a cadetship in the East India Company's service in which, in consequence of delicate health at the time, he was unable to engage. In 1858, however, he was able to proceed to India, and was appointed lieutenant to an irregular regiment under the Government of Bengal. In that year, whilst in command of a post on the G. T. Road, he attacked and dispersed a rebel force under Meghin Singh, who had seized a Government convoy, the greater part of which was rescued. Mr. Howard received the thanks of Government for his gallantry on this occasion. Subsequently he served in the disturbed districts of Lower Bengal, and was then selected with other officers to reorganise the civil police of Lower Bengal. After being in charge of one of the districts there, he was sent to Patna, and was then engaged under Mr. Monro, amongst others, in the arrest and trial of the Wahabee sect, the chief being eventually sentenced to death, and the rising broken up. On returning to England in 1868, Mr. Howard was offered one of the four District Superintendent posts, which were then created on the recommendation of a Parliamentary Committee, and in recognition of his special knowledge of the work, received a higher salary than otherwise would have pertained to the post. In 1886 after the West-end disturbances, Mr. Howard was specially placed in charge of the outdoor work of police and the oversight of meetings until Sir Charles Warren took charge. In 1889 he was sent to Gibraltar as Special Commissioner to reorganise the police of that colony, and for other purposes; and performed the duties entrusted to him with signal success. Mr. Howard has been prominently before the public during a rather stormy and trying period in the history of the police; and, both as regards the populace and the Metropolitan Police, has acquitted himself in a way that should render his appointment as the successor of Colonel Pearson in every way eminently satisfactory.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.(The only Quarterly Review in India.)*

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour;—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pair?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blights so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—
J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm.

BROAD ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 30, 1890.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th June; and from Calcutta to the 11th June.

MR. COTTON has been appointed to the Bengal Legislative Council, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Peacock's retirement.

To fill the places of Mr. Beaufort and Mr. M. C. Turner on the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. L. R. W. Forrest and Mr. J. L. Symons have been elected.

THE HON. W. H. RAVENSCROFT, Auditor-General of Ceylon, died on May 29th.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has been laid up with fever.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL M. C. FARRINGTON has vacated his post of Adjutant-General of the Madras Army, on attaining the age of fifty-five. His successor, Colonel H. P. Pearson, lately commanding the 12th Regimental District, has arrived from England.

SIR GEORGE GREAVES was staying at Panchgani, where his medical advisers recommend him to remain a short time before returning to Poona, as the carbuncle from which His Excellency has been suffering has not yet healed.

COLONEL SEWELL has retired from the command of the 5th Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent, and his services have been placed at the disposal of the Madras Government.

LIEUT.-COLONEL C. C. CAMPBELL, D.S.O., has been appointed Commandant of the 31st Madras Light Infantry.

THE Government of Bombay have sanctioned a gratuity of £2 10s. per diem to Brigadier-General W. T. Budgen, D.S.O., commanding the Bombay District, for a period of six months, as compensation for the injuries received by him on December 4th last by falling from his horse when on duty.

LIEUT.-COLONEL T. H. LLOYD, half-pay, Royal Artillery, 1st Class District Staff Officer, Poona, has been appointed to officiate as Deputy Quartermaster-General, Bombay Army, vice Colonel G. C. Hogg, appointed to officiate as Quartermaster-General.

LIEUT.-COLONEL H. J. KINSMAN, Royal Artillery, Ordnance Department, has been promoted Colonel in the Army, and Major G. W. M. Turnbull, T Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, Lieutenant-Colonel on the Indian Establishment, and appointed to command the Royal Artillery at Lucknow.

COLONEL BRERETON, 29th Madras Infantry, succeeds to the command of the Nair Brigade, Travancore, vacant by the death of Colonel Ketchen.

ONE of the effects of the recent inquiry by the Government of India into the working of the police is likely to be the appointment of special committees in the various Provinces to consider what changes and reforms should be carried out. The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces has already taken action in the matter, the following officers having been appointed on the Police Committee, which is ordered to assemble at Naini Tal forthwith:—Mr. W. Kaye (President); Colonel Ollivant, Inspector-General of Police; Mr. R. Smeaton and Mr. J. B. Thomson, of the Secretariat; and Mr. F. W. Porter (Secretary). Mr. P. Gray will officiate as Magistrate of Allahabad during Mr. Porter's absence. The work of the Committee will probably extend over some months, as the inquiry is intended to be an exhaustive one.

A NOTIFICATION is published by the Government of India in the Financial Department, making certain important exemptions from income-tax assessment. Among other rulings it is decided to consider tentage and horse allowances of officers as taxable salary, unless certain conditions are complied with.

THE new regiments raised in Upper Burma from the Indian Military Police are to be known as the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Regiments of Burma Infantry.

It is reported from Bombay that, in reply to an inquiry from the local Chamber of Commerce, the Government of India have stated that the Godhra and Rutlam Railway will be commenced next October or November, if funds are available. This line will be about 120 miles in length, and will connect the Bombay-Baroda Railway with the Ajmere-Khandwa branch of the Rajputana Malwa system.

THE Simla Horse and Dog Show, on June 7th, was a great success, only qualified by unpleasant weather. The entries were very numerous, and judging came as near to giving general satisfaction as it can ever be hoped to do. The prize for the best horse in the show was awarded to a waler of General Luck's, and for the best dog to a spaniel, the property of Dr. Owen. The jumping competition was won by the Maharana of Dhulpur.

A CYCLONE is reported to have occurred in the Gulf of Oman, damage to the extent of one and a-half lakhs being done at Muscat alone.

SOMEWHAT positive reports were current in Madras last week that the Government of India had postponed the consideration of the local Small Cause Courts Bill. The Madras Government and the High Court are being consulted as to the exact terms of the measure, but this does not involve any postponement in its introduction, this month into the Legislative Council at Simla.

THE Calcutta Trades Association have given their unqualified support to the movement in opposition to the Income-tax. In a memorial to the Viceroy they contend that it could never have been the original intention of the Legislature to bring agents of manufacturers within the terms of the Act, and express the opinion that taxation by the levying of percentages would be wrong and unjust. On the general question, the Association have held from the first that the Income-tax is wholly unsuited to the conditions of life and trade in India, and they now ask that it should be removed altogether.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL AT MANDALAY.—This building, which will be, when finished, one of the handsomest edifices in Burma, is rapidly approaching completion. It is of the newest Parisian designs—carved and painted throughout, and, when completed, will be the largest building of its kind in Burma. The belfry stands eighty feet. It is being erected at the sole expense of a pious Burman. When finished it is to be consecrated by the venerable and learned Bishop Bigandet.

THE following are the traffic receipts of the Indian Midland Railway for the week ending May 24th, 1890:—From merchandise, Rs. 39,286; passenger and other earnings, Rs. 30,575; total, Rs. 69,861; as compared with those of the corresponding period last year, which was Rs. 62,316, thus showing an increase this year of Rs. 7,545.

THE route which the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company will adopt in connecting their line with Cuttack and Puri, has not, the Pioneer learns, yet been decided upon. The facts are that some five ago Government made a survey from Panchpara, via Sambulpur, to Cuttack, by way of the Brahmani Valley, but Mr. Wynne, the Agent of the Company, from observations taken more recently, did not consider this would be a good alignment. He, therefore, asked that a reconnaissance might be run from Sambulpur across the Mahanadi through Binka, Sonpur, and Bod to Kurda, and thence to Cuttack and Puri. This proposal was agreed to, and two of his engineers are now engaged on the work. Mr. Moore, who is in charge of the reconnoitring party, has not yet sent in his report, so the suitability of the alignment to the south of the Mahanadi cannot yet be estimated.

NOTES

"QUIET and uneventful" still mark the description of the news from India, whether by wire or newspaper. But it is satisfactory to learn that the Natives of Bengal have not only projected a railway, but have undertaken its construction and direction. If this attempt be carried out successfully we shall rejoice with the Times correspondent, who telegraphs the statement that "Native enterprise is at last turning in a more useful and practical direction and political agitation."

POLITICAL agitation, so far as the "National Congress" is concerned, is likely to come to an untimely end for want of funds to support its representatives here. The Secretary of the Madras Committee has let that secret out. In a circular which he has issued to his Native friends, and which, though marked "strictly private and confidential," has found its way into the newspapers, he says that he receives letters every mail and urgent telegrams every week from Mr. Hume and Mr. Digby, urging him to send money at once, as the expenses in England are getting very heavy. If money is not sent forthwith to the London Committee, he fears that the whole work will have to be stopped there.

No day passes, he adds, without receiving telegrams such as the following:—"Digby wires for £500"; "No money—send funds"; "Digby again telegraphs must have money or work must stop"; "Make country send thousand pounds home. Very urgent." The poor Secretary at his wit's end how to meet these demands begs each delegate and sympathiser to give even ten rupees. "This," he writes, "is a very critical time, and we must redeem the promises to Mr. Hume which we made so solemnly—so I entreat you to send any amount you can."

THEN Mr. Hume himself makes this piteous appeal:—"I appeal to you all, as honest, earnest men, now, when the time has come to make bond fide strenuous exertions, first, to get all the promised contributions paid in promptly; secondly, to get the rest of the allotted contributions raised in due course; and, lastly, to secure from everyone round you, rich and poor, some additional aid for the General Congress Fund. You are all proved to be hot enough and enthusiastic enough about these matters in the Congress; but when you get back to your homes you seem to grow cold and callous, and I can get little real work out of too many of you. What words can I use strong enough to pierce your hearts, and to sting you into exertions such as Englishmen would make in like cases? You do owe something to me for subordinating everything in my life to your cause and your welfare. Indeed, you acknowledge this in words, and cheer me and make far more fuss over me personally than I either desire or deserve. Do now, for once, show by your acts in this your own work that you really and truly feel something of what you so generously profess."

As Mr. Hume boasted the other day at a meeting at Gatoshead that the Congress consisted of 1,900 gentlemen, elected by about five millions of people, "every religious sect in India being fairly and adequately represented," it seems strange that such an appeal should be necessary. Evidently money does not accompany political sentiment—at least, with the gentlemen of the Congress or those they profess to represent.

THE Times of India states that "Sir Frederick Roberts was offered the post of Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards some little time ago, and has accepted the appointment." This is authoritative. The Times correspondent telegraphed that Sir Frederick has been allowed two years' extension of his present command, and that all the army in India is rejoicing thereat. This is also authoritative. Vanity Fair says this is stale news, as that journal had five weeks ago given Sir Frederick an extension of his command. Some journals have nominated Lord Wolseley as Sir Frederick Roberts's successor. The Army and Navy

Gazette says that Lord Wolseley was offered the Indian command five years ago, and refused it. In the multitude of newspapers there may be wisdom, but it is difficult to get at facts sometimes.

WE take the following from the Pioneer:—"The agents of the Congress at home have done their work very skilfully, no doubt, and more particularly so in the arrangements which they were able to make for supplying the Indian public with news of their proceedings. Our London correspondent, in his telegram of May 17th, warned us that the 'Central News' messages regarding the progress and prospects of the agitation were misleading, and we have now learned the reason for the exaggerated terms in which those telegrams were framed. It appears that the 'Central News' was actually supplied with the particulars which they wired by the Congress Agency in London. This clever manipulation by the Congress leaders of what purported to be a trustworthy news-service is only what might have been expected from men who countenance the gaining of signatures to petitions by false pretences; but it is a more serious matter that they should have found agents willing to help them in deceiving the public. The latter will not be slow to pass their verdict on a transaction which is most discreditable to all the parties concerned in it."

IF Mr. Justice Norris were of the Bombay, and not the Bengal, High Court, writes the Lahore paper, it is fair to assume that he would be feeling particularly uncomfortable just now. Even as matters stand he cannot but feel concerned at the decision of the Bombay Government against public servants mixing themselves up with political agitators. In Mr. Norris's case it is well known that his advocacy of the Congress was somewhat of a gushing and emotional character, and almost unsolicited; and, apart from the foolish appearance such a situation makes, he was distinctly in the wrong as a judge of a High Court which might be called upon to decide cases arising out of the agitation. The prohibition repeated by the Bombay Government is an old one; but, as Lord Harris is fresh from home, he may be said to reflect the ideas of the home authorities on the subject, and his ruling is therefore satisfactory both in its administrative and inferential aspects.

IN connection with the working of the Income-Tax a good many complaints have, says the Pioneer, been made of the want of secrecy in assessors' offices regarding returns made by firms and companies. The Government of India are most anxious to prevent any disclosures being made, which would be prejudicial to the interests of the persons taxed; and a notification in last Saturday's Gazette sets forth that "all public servants are forbidden to make public or disclose, except for the purpose of the working of the Act, any information contained in documents delivered or produced with respect to assessments under Part IV. of the second Schedule of the Act, and any public servant committing a breach of this rule shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 166 of the Indian Penal Code." All public servants are further enjoined to be most careful to regulate their proceedings, as far as practicable, in such manner as to prevent information which should be kept secret from becoming known: it is particularly to be withheld by officers administering the Act, from persons in the employment of assesseees.

THE official returns of foreign land trade of British India for eleven months ending February, 1890, show a falling-off in value of imports amounting to 35 lakhs, and an increase of exports valued at 31 lakhs. The decrease in imports is more than accounted for by the extraordinary decline in importations from Karenni and Zimmé, which fell by some 42 lakhs, while the increase in exports is mainly due to a rise of 25 lakhs in the value of consignments to Cabul, and of 6 lakhs in value of those to Cashmere.

PRESSURE on our space to-day obliges us to keep back a notice of Sir George Birdwood's "Report on the Old Records of the India Office," which we acknowledged the receipt of in our last. Justice cannot be done to such a work in a hurried note of review. Sir George and Mr. F. C. Danvers are rendering, as we said, excellent service to the scholar and the historian by their labours in this most interesting field. By some unaccountable slip of the pen or type a Mr. Juland Danvers was accredited with this merit—last week—but it was not intended to give even to Sir Juland the credit—which he would, of course, be the first to repudiate—of work done by the well-known and indefatigable registrar in whose immediate charge these valuable records are, and whose excellent classification of them has been so useful to all students of Indian history.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 29.

The registration last week of the Bengal Provincial Railway Company marks the beginning of a new era in India's industrial progress. Hitherto all Indian railway projects have owed their inception to Europeans. Now for the first time a company, formed and directed entirely by Natives, has undertaken railway construction. The company's field of operations is confined to Lower Bengal. It will probably begin with an extension of the existing Tarkessur line. The manufacturing companies, under Native direction, also formed within the last few days, give satisfactory evidence that Native enterprise is at last turning in a more useful and practical direction than political agitation.

Mahomed Anvaraddin, grandson of the late Prince of Arcot, has delivered a remarkable address to a Mahomedan meeting at Madras, advising them to improve their social and educational condition. He urged them not to sit moaning over the past glories of Islam, but to fit themselves for positions of trust and to stand loyally by the British Government, which always showed itself a just and merciful master.

An incident has occurred near Hyderabad attracting some attention. Three British officers driving in a tonga to Secunderabad passed the Nizam's carriage on the road. According to one story an Arab trooper of the escort suddenly rushed at them without provocation, cut at them with a sword, and upset the tonga, causing some injury to the inmates. It is asserted, on the other hand, that the trooper's horse bolted, came into collision with the tonga, and upset it accidentally; that the man, being on duty, had a drawn sword in his hand, but did not cut at the officers; and that the Nizam immediately send an aide-de-camp to express his regret and to offer assistance. A commission has been appointed to inquire into the matter fully.

The Madras Government has refused to release the Mohunt, or High Priest of Tripati, who was lately convicted of embezzling the temple funds. Numerous petitions in his favour were presented, but Lord Connemara held that the sentence as reduced by the High Court on appeal was not too severe.

The Bengal Government is about to undertake legislation for the purpose of removing certain defects in the system of realising land revenue which have long been matter of complaint. Two draft Bills with elaborate reports on the subject, prepared by Mr. Beames, one of the most experienced revenue officers in the province, have been published, and the opinions of all interested are invited.

The monsoon is now well established, there has been a plentiful rainfall throughout India, and the prospects of the crops in Kumaon, where distress was feared, are now very favourable.

Fighting continues beyond the north-west frontier with unvarying success on the part of Umra, Khan of Jandol. A Lahore paper publishes a report that the Khan of Dir has fled to Kohistan, and that Dir has fallen into Umra Khan's hands. It remains to be seen whether the Ameer will interfere.

THE MURDER OF MR. DALGLEISH.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 29.

The Calcutta Englishman publishes details, which have just reached India, regarding the murder of Mr. Dalgeish. It appears that a trader named Dad Muhammed, who was an old friend of Mr. Dalgeish, had been travelling with him for several stages; they were on good terms, and took tea together every evening. On the evening of April 8th, 1888, Mr. Dalgeish went as usual to Muhammed's tent. Suddenly a shot was heard, but no sound of a scuffle. The servants, panic stricken, made no attempt to interfere. Presently Muhammed came out, carrying a sword, and threatened to treat servants as he had treated the Kaffir.

Next morning he seized Mr. Dalgeish's goods, except some small articles, and ordered the servants to accompany him. They did so for some distance, when he dismissed them, and they returned to camp and carried Mr. Dalgeish's body to Ladakh, where it was buried. An examination of the body showed two gun-shot wounds and several sword-cuts. The only apparent reasons for the crime are treachery and a desire to plunder.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 28.

Mr. Hodgkinson, C.S.I., Commissioner of Pegu, has been appointed Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma. Mr. Hodgkinson has considerable judicial experience, and is in every way qualified for the post. The appointment of a Judicial Commissioner, which has been too long delayed, will doubtless have an excellent effect, and assist in the pacification of the upper province. It has recently become known that the Government of India in 1888 was prepared to appoint a Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, but was prevented doing so by the strong opposition of Sir C. Crosthwaite. Mr. Hodgkinson, who is absent on leave, assumes office on his return in a few days.

A large number of dacoits recently surrendered in various districts. There has been some discussion in the local Press regarding the treatment extended to them. Several dacoits, who appear to have surrendered on the faith of the promise of an amnesty, are being tried summarily.

It is a matter of great importance that faith should be fully kept with dacoits who surrender. The decision of such questions ought not to be left to an individual district officer. Any breach of faith will inevitably drive large numbers of dacoits who have surrendered back to their old lawless practices. In a minute on the Police Administration Report for last year Sir C. Crosthwaite remarks that surrendered dacoits form a not inconsiderable section of Upper Burma society. In the Minhu district alone 1,491 dacoits surrendered to the police last year.

One hundred thousand logs of teak timber are lying at the Government station above Moulmein. Owing to the slack demand the orders will not pay the recently-imposed import duty.

The Mandalay Herald states that, in eight months, eight police officers stationed at the Ruby Mines have been successively disabled by the unhealthy climate.

COLONEL POLE-CAREW'S ACCIDENT.

The following further particulars regarding the accident which befel Colonel Pole-Carew while out shooting elephants in the Pegu jungles appear in the Pioneer. Colonel Carew with two Native shikaris had been out tracking elephants in a very thick jungle all day, but was unable to get a good shot at a tusker. Eventually he fired at an elephant in the middle of a herd without having a good sight of the animal. In avoiding the rush which the wounded elephant made, Colonel Carew found himself in front of three others who had all stampeded. The jungle was much too thick to turn in or effect an escape through; but fortunately the first of the three was a young tusker. Instead of doing what a full-grown elephant would have done—knocking the intruder down with his trunk and trampling on him—the elephant caught him on the left arm with his trunk and pitched him headlong into a khud. Colonel Carew's rifle went off in the fall, and the stock was smashed in half. On recovering from the fall he found he had a wound in the arm where the elephant had struck him, but whether it was from the tusk or the bullet of the rifle is a matter of speculation. There were two holes in the sleeve of the coat as if a bullet had passed through, and the muscle and flesh of his arm were torn away. Colonel Carew had really the good luck to be charged by a young elephant. Immediately behind the latter were two enormous animals who would have made short work of him if he had not been thrown out of their way. The two Burman shikaris who witnessed the whole affair remained staunchly close at hand, and gave every assistance when the herd had rushed past. Colonel Carew had to walk twelve miles through the jungle, and his wound rudely bandaged up in a piece of oiled rag from his cartridge bag, wrapped about with a pagri, before he reached a village, where a bullock-cart could be procured to carry him onward. His wound, as we have stated, was a severe one, but has healed rapidly.

ONE of the effects of the recent inquiry by the Government of India into the working of the police is likely to be the appointment of special committees in the various provinces, to consider what changes and reforms should be carried out. Sir Auckland Colvin has already taken action in the matter, and has appointed a police committee which assembles at once at Naini Tal.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

PRICES IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The industry of the Department of Finance and Commerce in collecting and arranging the data of economical problems relating to India seems inexhaustible. The latest contribution to Indian economy is in the form of a blue book upon prices and wages; and although upon opening it it will be found to present to the eye a bewildering mass of figures, even a small and superficial examination yields more than one valuable conclusion nearly affecting the happiness and welfare of the Indian populations. Take the rice crop in Burma; the fluctuations in price are remarkably insignificant for the reason chiefly that the crop is the most certain in, perhaps, the whole world, owing to climatic conditions that may be confidently expected to recur; and herein we find one great cause of the light-heartedness and easy-going character of the Burman. From time immemorial the rice crop in Burma has not been known to fail. There are no landlords to enhance the rent the moment prices rise; and the result is that the Burman has only to tickle the ground, wait for the monsoon and the melting snows to lay the earth under water, and reap a harvest that secures him from want, and leaves him with a surplus for gaming and the bejewelment of his womenkind. Another fact brought into prominence by the figures is the influence of famine on prices. Bygone famines affected not only the particular province in which the famine operated, but the other provinces as well. In the Madras famine of 1877 the prices of jowar and gram (for examples) rose in the case of jowar, from 27 seers the rupee to 9 seers the rupee; and in the case of gram, from 20 seers to 10 and 11. The North-West and Bombay were also affected. In the North-West the price of jowar rose from 23 seers to 14 for the rupee, and gram from 23 to 16 and 19 seers. In Bombay jowar rose from 19-8 to 9-7 and 10-8, and gram from 15-9 to 7-7 and 9-7. A third feature to be noticed is the effect the development of communication by road and rail has had in so linking the provinces together, that whatever the state of the harvest in one, the rise or fall in prices is much more general and much more equal than in the days when each province was isolated from its neighbour. It is, we venture to think, lessons of this sort that reports like the one now dealt with ought to be made to teach, and they should be conveyed directly by experts in science of economics, not left to the sometimes uncertain exposition of the newspapers.

THE KASHMIR RAILWAY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Some of our contemporaries, we note, are inclined to depreciate our information regarding the Kashmir Railway scheme, and to affirm that the affair is still in nubibus. They are, however, mistaken; for there is a very definite scheme under consideration; and the following further statistics with regard to it may be interesting. The proposed capital is 300 lakhs, and in order to pay the shareholders 4 per cent., the net profits would have to be 12 lakhs. Now, the shareholders would in the first place get 2 per cent., or 6 lakhs, certain; because this would be jointly guaranteed by the Government of India and the Kashmir State. Further, General de Bourbel has estimated the traffic returns at 20 lakhs, and in order to pay the shareholders the other half of the requisite 12 lakhs, the gross earnings would only have to be 13½ lakhs; because the N.W. Railway would work the line at 55 per cent. of the gross earnings, to cover working expenses. In other words, 45 per cent. of any money taken would go to the shareholders, even if the railway were worked at a loss. This, however, is extremely improbable; and in any case it would be the concern of the N.W. Railway. On the other hand, it is reasonably safe to suppose that the railway will take 13½ lakhs, considering that the estimate is 20 lakhs. There is every probability, therefore, of its paying 4 per cent. to the shareholders, whose actual guarantee is 2 per cent. interest, plus 45 per cent. of all money taken by the Railway, until the shareholders get 4½ per cent. interest.

THE FINANCIAL OUTLOOK.

(Pioneer.)

Sir David Barbour's revised estimate of the financial position at the end of 1889-90 was much more favourable than had been anticipated and came upon the public as a surprise: but if we take the receipts and issues of the treasuries during the month of March as a basis for calculation, we shall find that the results of the year surpass even the Finance Member's expectations. The forecast thus arrived at cannot, it is true, be regarded as absolutely final, since the receipts and issues from the treasuries are only an imperfect guide to the actuals under some of the most important heads of revenue, and the cross transactions between the disbursing officers of the various Departments cannot be settled at once; but even if we make allowance for all possible deductions on this account, the balance of unforeseen increment which will remain is substantial. Had existing financial arrangements been maintained, the surplus according to the revised estimate would have been Rx. 2,733,000, but a respite has been allowed in calling up the 50 lakhs levied on the Provincial Governments, and Rx. 433,500 is to be carried to the Famine Grant, so that the sum Sir David Barbour felt justified in calculating upon in March was Rx. 1,809,700. According to the new returns, however, which may, as we have said, be regarded as at least approximately final, there has been an improvement in the total revenue of Rx. 397,700, and a saving in the total expenditure of Rx. 656,200, or a total improvement of Rx. 1,053,900, of which a sum of Rx. 294,600 represents the addition to the provincial and local balances, leaving for the imperial share Rx. 759,300. That is to say, the surplus of the year will in all probability be increased by about three-quarters of a million nominal sterling, or by over 40 per cent.

"FRED BRINE."

(Times of India.)

The death of General Brine—"Fred Brine" as he was always known in India—reminds us of a fantastic, eccentric, but very clever individuality. He joined the Royal Engineers in 1847, and managed to see a good deal of service all over the world. He served as a Volunteer, and with much distinction in the Crimean War. He was present at the chief naval engagement in Japan, and, if we remember rightly, he started the Volunteer movement in Hongkong. For other services, not officially recorded, he was made a Knight of the Tower and Sword of Portugal. He spent many years in the Public Works Department, and was for long Executive Engineer of the Agr. Division, where he developed an inveterate dislike to the members of the Civil Service. During his different periods of furlough he travelled far and wide. He visited the Crimea more than once to report on the graves of the British soldiers buried there. His map of the tombs was welcomed in hundreds of English households, while his writings put a stop to the neglect into which the cemeteries had fallen. He went to Iceland, and made an elaborate map of that little known island. He was one of the founders of the Balloon Society of England, and tried without much success to cross from Dover to Calais. He then brought the idea of ballooning out to India, and failing to get an appointment as head of all the Volunteers in India was placed on general duty, and spent his time in travelling from place to place. It was at this period that he wrote a series of extraordinary letters in one of the newspapers, saying a trifle too frankly what he thought of all the private individuals he met, the lives they led, the way they dressed, and what they said, the hospitality they did or did not dispense, and so on. Then he started off to Madagascar to help the Madagaskies against the French. This was a trifle too much for the Government of India. He was stopped at Zanzibar and ordered back to this country at once. He next made a somewhat foolish attempt to reach Upper Burma from Chittagong, and after this last wild-goose chase he went home for good; and from thence we have continued to hear from him from time to time in connection with the Balloon Society and the wrongs of the poor. General Brine in his younger days had a great love of the stage, and used to boast that he took an opera company over to Dublin for two or three seasons until the Duke of Cambridge "pulled him up." At the time of the Malta Expedition he hastened down to Bombay and wanted Mr. Wilson, of Wilson's Circus, to join him in taking the Circus to Malta. Mr. Wilson declined on the very sensible plea that Colonel Brine did not look like a business man. He was originally a brilliant talker and always a kind-hearted man au fond, in spite of his odd dislike to the Civil Service, and other eccentric fads that grew upon him with advancing years. He was, while in India, the centre of many very pleasant myths. He always claimed the credit, and we think with some justice, of having introduced the post-card into India. Time after time he addressed the Postmaster-General on the subject, and was eventually told to mind his own business. This put him on his metal. He had his own post-cards printed. They were identical with the post-cards then in use at home, except that in the space where the stamp ought to be there was printed in small type "here affix a half anna stamp." These cards, a number of which were printed at our office, were distributed broadcast to clubs and institutions. Colonel Brine used them himself in his correspondence with the Postmaster-General. He put on the ordinary letter stamp and succeeded in proving that it was perfectly legal to write his letter on its cover if he chose. Shortly afterwards the quarter anna post-card was introduced, and Colonel Brine was, of course, vastly delighted. "Fred Brine's post-cards" are now among the most precious possessions of the Indian stamp collector.

MAHOMMEDANS AND THE COUNCILS BILL.

(Rast Gofar.)

The Mahommedan Literary Society of Calcutta has sent to England a vigorous protest against Mr. Bradlaugh's India Councils Bill, and in this respect they have followed some other Mahommedan organisations throughout India. They approve of Lord Cross's Bill, and do not wish for more. It is a great pity that the Congress should have missed an opportunity of uniting the whole of India on a rational and practicable plan of representation. At the Bombay sessions Madras led the way under the masterful personality of the clever Radical, Mr. Eardley Norton, and the whole of the delegates, not to mention an insignificant minority of dissentients, assented to his scheme of popular electorates. As we hear no ill-will to the Congress per se, we regretted this leap into the unknown, because we feared its effect would be to withdraw from the movement the sympathy of its discerning friends, and to scare away nervous people from supporting any of its proposals. Sir William Hunter, who contributed a year or two ago a series of sympathetic letters on the Congress to the London Times, has lately published in the same paper an article, stating clearly and forcibly his objections to the revolutionary scheme of the Congress to which Mr. Bradlaugh has agreed to stand godfather. It is to be hoped that the defections of such eminent men will teach Mr. Hume that he has gone too far in his zeal to bless India with representative institutions, and that it is time, for the sake of "the cause," to beat a prudent retreat.

HOW THE POOR LIVE.

(Advocate of India.)

It is impossible to read, without sincere commiseration, the returns of prices and wages that have been published by the Government. They show that over large tracts of country honest and industrious labourers earn no more than a penny a day. No amount of eloquence could add to the force of this simple statement. A penny a day for food, lodging, raiment, marriage expenses, and provision for old age—that is the record of labourers in parts of Rajputana, Oudh, the North-West Provinces, and elsewhere, the average earning of an able-bodied agricultural labourer being from two to three rupees for a month. In other provinces and districts the economic condition is a trifle better; but nowhere, in any of the three Presidencies, is the average agricultural wage much more than five rupees. The reason for this state of things cannot be easily specified. It seems to have nothing to do with over-population, because there is as much poverty in the sparsely-inhabited regions as in those where the land is overrun by workers; it is common to independent Native States and to British territory; it is characteristic of all the Native races, without distinction. As soon as we pass over to Burma a great improvement in the condition of the agriculturist becomes apparent. In the Lower Province his wage averages from Rs. 15 to Rs. 37 per month, according to the district in which he is employed. No doubt, his expenses are also higher than they would be in India; but there is nevertheless a large margin of profit. The Upper Provinces does not yet hold out the same degree of attraction to the emigrant, for here the average rate of wage is about ten rupees. The explanation commonly offered for the prosperity of the ryot in Burma is that the land is thinly populated, and that the Natives of the country are too lazy to work continuously. Therefore large numbers of immigrants have been attracted from India, and have made the country their home. The explanation can only be partly true, because, if other things were equal, paddy raised at Bassein, where the labourer gets thirty-seven rupees a month, could not compete with paddy grown in Behar, where the ryot earns a monthly wage of four or five rupees. To compensate for this crushing weight of wages, there must be superior land, superior modes of cultivation, or some other great advantage. The subject presents a grand theme for the political economists.

CLERICAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

(Madras Times.)

There have, of late years, been many changes in the administration of the Government touching matters relating to economy and efficiency in the clerical establishment. The formation of committees for the settlement of issues involving these questions has yet determined nothing upon any fixed or reliable basis; experimental measures of a tentative character have been employed, resulting in effecting economy more successfully, though, perhaps, at the sacrifice of efficiency; and in many instances too close a scrutiny, and the application of too severe measures in view to such economy, has resulted in extravagant expenditure. The abolition of a single department has often been the cause of a redundancy in another, and thus the great machinery of appliances for too strict economy has tended more to disturb, than to regulate, existing and well-organised systems, without promoting any favourable results. There are continual transfers in the Revenue and Upper Subordinate establishments, necessitated by applications for leave and furlough. For these there is absolutely no help, and such changes are right and proper in the interests of the public service. But why are they confined to the Engineering and Account establishments? Why should not such transfers be made as well in the clerical establishments of the Supreme and Local Governments? We hear of a few isolated instances in this direction, which have proved detrimental to the interests of many, while in some cases they have proved helpful.

The question of test examinations, in view to the securing of efficient agency in the clerical service, has signally failed. We hear of a man in the receipt of Rs.40 reported on as inefficient and thoroughly incapable of performing his duties; he obtains leave, passes the Lower Standard, and is immediately transported as a successful candidate into an appointment of Rs.200, with absolutely no departmental experience whatever, thus superseding men who have been engaged for the last twelve or fifteen years in mastering their work. This is absolutely undesirable. Then there are others, who have borne excellent characters, who have studiously and zealously devoted their time and services to Government; but who have never advanced one step in promotion, because they have been considered unworthy of higher emoluments. Some of these men have, under the weights of continued disappointments, left their situations and have been successfully entertained elsewhere, in many cases on more than double their former allowances. How is this? If they have failed to give satisfaction in one office, why are their services appreciated in another? Now these are matters deserving very strict and careful investigation. It is much to be regretted that such anomalies are not thoroughly sifted, so that the facts be ascertained. If a committee were formed for such a purpose, many things would come to light which are now obscure. Government would be better served, there would be less cause for complaints, every man would be righted, and a great deal of wrong-doing would be discovered. We say, if a man is getting stagnated in his own office, because of some reason of which he is in ignorance, by all means transfer him to another; let him have the same chance as the more favoured have, who belong to the same service. The criterion of pay and allowances, which is often made to determine a man's position clerically, rarely determines his qualifications. There are men to be found in the service of Government in receipt of, perhaps, Rs. 100, who would put to shame the dignified Rs. 600 salaried man, who may probably be drawing that handsome income because his father served in the Indian Mutiny! How many applications for appointments in the Service are based upon such and similar statements? And, though the exceptions may be few as to the success attending such applications, yet the principle is wrong, and should have no toleration or precedence whatever.

There is a cry for young blood. Let young blood be drafted in, but the old will have to teach the young idea how to shoot, and as soon as he has fairly learnt to handle his rifle, his first shot is directed to his tutor, in order to advance his own claims by the creation of a vacancy. That is how affairs are managed, or, rather, mismanaged, in the various departments of the Government Service; and it behoves the Supreme Authority to order a strict investigation into these matters, in view to a more settled and harmonious order of affairs, and to the furtherance of good in the interests of the service, and to the security against harm of tried, trusted, and worthy employés in the service of Government. There is abundant room for radical changes, changes conducive to the interests of Government and to the conduct of men in its employ; and, unless there is a reform, and a more thorough and practical ruling observed for the preservation and maintenance of a reliable and efficient clerical establishment, there will always be a want of confidence on the part of the men, and less zeal and energy manifested by them in the performance of their very responsible duties.

MUNICIPALITIES IN THE PUNJAB.

(Englishman)

Sir Charles Aitchison, of all the Provincial Governors in India, threw himself most heartily into the project of local self-government. He wrote the memorandum which Lord Ripon regarded as most perfectly explaining the beauties of the new scheme. It may be assumed, therefore, that in the Punjab the new system has had its fairest trial, and a review of its working in the province is not without interest. The number of municipalities, abolished in the Punjab since the introduction of self-government in 1884, has been forty-four, leaving at the close of the official year 1888-89 one hundred and fifty-eight, of which five were in danger of extinction, as the Committees took no interest in their duties. Of this number sixty-three municipalities have an annual income of less than Rs. 5,000, while forty-eight have a population of less than 5,000, according to the Census of 1881. It is impossible for towns with such limited incomes to do much towards carrying out local improvements; and if they have proved unequal to the burden placed upon them, it is the fault of those who, instead of bringing about such fundamental changes by slow degrees, attempted to force them on the whole province by a few issues of the Gazette. There are only eight municipal towns of the first class, namely, Delhi, Amritsar, Lahore, Multan, Simla, Dharmasala, Dalhousie, and Murree, and of these only the first four have a population of more than fifty thousand.

The history of Amritsar is rather curious reading. At the end of 1887 it was brought to the notice of the Lieutenant-Governor that there had been no election since July, 1884, although under the Act members of a municipality can only hold office for three years. The reason was that party spirit had run high, and not only were the officials in fear that disturbances would follow an election, but the leading inhabitants were also opposed to holding an election. This is altogether a singular commentary on the unity of the Indian nation. It was felt that such a state of things amounted to a scandal, and a Committee was therefore elected under new rules, which are said to have worked well hitherto. In Delhi, during the year under notice, there were three vacancies, for each of which only one candidate came forward and was returned unopposed, and in Lahore no European candidate came forward at the election in the civil station, and one had, therefore, to be nominated by Government. In the smaller municipal towns, with a population of over 20,000, there does not appear to have been very keen competition for membership, with the exception of Ludhiana, where nine candidates stood for three vacancies, and out of 426 persons entitled to vote 386 polled. In the Jullunder district outgoing members were re-elected in every case. The number of meetings varied greatly, from fifty held at the Simla municipality to three held at Dera Ismail Khan. The attendance, however, was generally good, except at Lahore, which seems to set a bad example to the rest of the province; and where it has been found necessary to nominate the Deputy Commissioner a member of the municipality. Complaints have been made at Lahore that the existing qualifications for membership are not sufficiently high, and that the election of men of humble local position, to wit, the chuprasie frequently referred to by the Lahore paper, tends to lower the status of the Municipal Commissioners. To remedy this evil the desirability of fixing a special property qualification for candidates is now under consideration. The municipal rules in Simla are reported to have worked fairly well, with the exception of the lodging-house rules, which have been found difficult to carry out. The payment of full compensation in cases where the Committee finds it necessary to prohibit the erection or re-erection of a building is found to hamper the Commissioners in their endeavours to prevent overcrowding. This is really an urgent matter, but the local Government seems to be in no haste to settle it. In Simla more than elsewhere, it is necessary to prevent overcrowding; but where high compensation has to be paid the Municipality cannot afford to interfere, and in some cases owners of land threaten to build, merely to try and obtain compensation.

It seems reasonable that private individuals should make some sacrifice without excessive compensation where public interests are concerned. At all events, the matter is one calling for a prompt decision from the local Government, and which should not be allowed to drift indefinitely. Reviewing the province as a whole the Lieutenant-Governor is of opinion that in many of the smaller municipalities there has been a want of energy and public spirit, as was to be expected. Octroi is levied in all the Punjab municipalities, and is the only form of taxation except at some of the hill stations. In 1888-89 the amount raised by this tax was Rs. 23,38,729, which was nearly a lakh more than in the previous year. In several instances the tax has been given out to contractors, and attention has been drawn to this objectionable practise by the local Government. Suggestions were also made some time ago that other methods should be adopted for raising taxes, but this advice has not yet been acted upon. Local self-government, as far as taxation is concerned, has from the first been a blessing in disguise, and municipalities have been privileged to raise new taxes which the Government managed to do without when the public were better served than they are now. In several of the Punjab districts there is evidence that the export trade in food grains and oil seeds has been systematically taxed, and the attention of Commissioners has been directed to the necessity for checking the practice. The largest sum standing to the credit of any one municipality at the close of 1888-89 was Rs. 3,91,225 at Delhi. Nearly the whole of this accumulation will now be spent on the city waterworks. The Rawalpindi and Simla municipalities had balances of Rs. 1,14,114 and Rs. 92,164 respectively; but about a third of the latter sum is reserved for the liquidation of the Town Hall debenture loan. A Government loan of a lakh and a half was granted to the Peshawur municipality for the construction of waterworks in the city and is now being utilised.

BENGAL.

(June 11.)

Dr. UNNA's system of treating leprosy is to have a fair trial in the Calcutta Leper Asylum. The District Charitable Society has ordered a supply of Dr. Unna's remedies from London, and they may be expected shortly.

THE annual Eton dinner was given on the 4th inst. in Goughly Hall, Calcutta, by Mr. W. B. Gladstone and Mr. W. Garth. In addition to the hosts the following old Etonians were present:—Messrs. J. F. Veasey, C.S., G. C. Sconce, C. E. Buckland, C.S., Dudley B. Myres, A. S. Gladstone, A. F. Simson, A. L. Paul, J. Mavrogordato, W. Graham, J. C. Gregory, F. Peacock, E. C. C. Haythorne, and Capt. Philips.

A GREAT controversy in Bengal has ended, strange to say, in common sense. The meeting was one of vegetarians, and the question one of cod-liver oil or no cod-liver oil. Cod-liver oil is an animal oil, and on that score was violently attacked, the vegetarians, who were faithful to their idol, going dead against the oil. Others arose and advised a milder course, suggesting that cod-liver oil may be taken so long as nothing as good in the vegetable world can be produced. But another party went farther, and stated that all animal substance should be taken where they are required for the preservation of life. It was agreed by a majority that this was true wisdom; and so, after much expenditure of time and words, this truth prevailed. But what about the great egg and milk questions? Will they eventually be as satisfactorily solved?

THE only bridges at the close of last season's work which remained to be completed on the Bengal portion of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway line were, says Indian Engineering, the Damuda, the Subanrika, and a few minor ones. The Damuda bridge is on the eve of completion, and it was expected that an engine would cross on the 1st inst. The Subanrika is complete but for laying the permanent way, and all the minor bridges are completed, so that the line from Asansol to Goilkora, 140 miles, already opened for traffic, will be completed thoroughly, and all temporary diversions raised before the 15th inst. The permanent way is laid seven miles beyond Goilkora Station and over the tunnel by an excellently laid-out diversion, thereby allowing the engineers to continue the plate-laying beyond, and carry by rail to site all the girders and material required. The gap between the rails from the Nagpore end and the Asansol side, which was 120 miles at the beginning of this season, has now been reduced to 50 miles; and if the rains hold off till the 15th inst., the rail head from the other end will have reached the Brahmini River, leaving but 40 miles of this great undertaking to be linked in. It is, therefore, confidently expected that there will be through communication established between Asansol and Bombay by October 1st next, and that the line will be opened throughout by January 1st, 1891, being one year in advance of the time estimated when the undertaking was commenced. Considering the most unhealthy districts through which this line runs, 150 miles of which is all jungle, totally devoid of all skilled labour, and the sparse population which exists not knowing or caring for money and too indolent to work, the rapidity with which this line was constructed reflects great credit on the Agent and Chief Engineer and all his staff.

A most barbarous custom, says a correspondent of the Statesman, is yet prevalent in Bengal. Men of the lower orders exact money at the time of their daughter's marriage ceremony from the bridegroom's party. This vile practice has been carried to such a length that it is no better than selling a daughter to the highest bidders. At any proposal at such a marriage the parents of the bride, without looking to the qualifications of the bridegroom, at once inquire what sum the bridegroom is able to pay to the father of the bride. If this sum satisfies the father, there is then no difficulty in completing the proposed marriage. These cruel and avaricious parents do not hesitate for a moment to sacrifice their daughters for money to worthless and aged bridegrooms, and they show no concern for the future happiness or misery of their daughters. Most of their daughters are, to gratify their father's excessive avarice, married to old men, who in many cases die within a few years after their marriage. Then the young widows are thrown into the depths of misery, corruption, and immorality. It is needless to say when money is the essential basis for such inhuman alliances, no equal and proper matches for their daughters can be made. It is generally the case that a girl of ten years becomes the wife of a man of sixty, seventy, or sometimes eighty years, and unfortunately the girl before arriving at the age of sixteen or seventeen years finds herself a widow, and in the deepest misfortune. So low is the idea of morality among this class of men, that parents who have many daughters are considered to be most fortunate, as they earn a livelihood by selling their daughters.

MADRAS.

(June 11.)

MAJOR GOUGH, Military Secretary to the Nizam's Government, is still ill. He has been removed from the Neilgherries to Madras, where he is still confined to his room. The Government has given him the extension of leave asked for.

MUKAND RACH, a Hindoo tahsildar in the employ of the Nizam, in the Warangul district, has been dismissed from the public service. He was charged with having destroyed the recorded deposition of a witness in a judicial proceeding before himself, which he afterwards substituted by one to suit his own purpose.

THE case in which the question of jurisdiction over European British subjects was raised a few weeks ago before the Nizam's High Court, by a young English lady, has been decided by the Government of his Highness, on reference, in her favour. The High Court has accordingly transferred the case from their file to that of General Campbell, the English Judge in the Nizam's service, who is also a Justice of the Peace under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

BALKISHEN DASS, the saukar who was recently convicted and sentenced to one year's imprisonment and one lakh of rupees fine, has appealed to a Division Bench against the conviction and sentence of Mr. Justice Hafiz Ahmed Raza Khan. The Honourable Mr. Evans, of the Calcutta Bar, with Lord Colin Campbell, of the Bombay Bar, are likely to appear for the accused in the appeal, which will probably be heard next month.

BOMBAY.

(June 13.)

SURGEON J. W. T. ANDERSON has been allowed furlough on medical certificate for six months.

MR. H. BATTY, on being relieved by Mr. J. R. Naylor, is to act as Judge and Sessions Judge of Rutnagherry.

THE services of Surgeon-Major G. H. Bull, M.D., are replaced at the disposal of Government in the Military Department.

CAPTAIN W. A. THOMPSON, 1st Bombay Lancers, acts as Cantonment Magistrate at Deesa, during the absence of Capt. A. Wapshare.

MR. H. W. J. BAGNELL, C.S., acts as Professor of English and History, Elphinstone College, during the absence of Mr. G. W. Forrest, B.A.

MR. J. E. PENTON, acting District Superintendent of Police, Upper Sind Frontier, has been allowed privilege leave for two months and three days.

MR. T. J. B. THATCHER is appointed to act as District Superintendent of Police in the Upper Sind Frontier District during the absence of Mr. Penton.

ADMINISTRATIVE reports take cognisance of matters small as well as great. A recent official report states that "a pair of bullocks was purchased for the Kheri Division; one of these was unfortunately killed by a tiger."

THE balloting at the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday for chairman of the Chamber, in place of Mr. A. F. Beaufort, who resigned office on proceeding to Europe, resulted in the election of Mr. L. R. W. Forrest, of the firm of Messrs. Killick, Nixon, and Co.

ON the evening of the 3rd a thunderstorm passed over Kurrachee, it being specially felt at Manora, where a building, fortunately unoccupied at the time, was struck by lightning. There was scarcely any rain at Kurrachee, but a good shower fell between Malir and Jungshai.

AMONGST the passengers who left for Europe by the P. and O. mail steamer on Friday were Mr. J. Monteath, C.S., late Private Secretary to Lord Reay, and at present Collector of Land Revenue, Customs, and Opium; Khan Bahadoor Bezonjee Sorabjee of Mhow, Major-General Sir Thomas Baker, the Nawab of Baroda, Surgeon-Major Cameron, and Mr. R. P. Brunton, Assessor and Collector, Bombay Municipality.

THE up mail-train from Madras, which arrived at the Victoria Terminus at 4.55 P.M. on the 5th instant, or about six hours behind time, encountered a severe storm while running on the G.I.P. Railway between Karabagon and Hoodgi Junction Stations on Wednesday night, and between these places ran into two tanks which were used for supplying water, and which had been blown down by the wind on to the permanent way. The fireman and guard of the mail train were injured, but luckily no hurt was sustained by the passengers, the delay in the arrival of the mails in Bombay being attributed to the sending of another train to bring them on, the engine of the mail being damaged by the concussion, the storm being described as quite unprecedented in its force.

THE running of trains at night during the rains over the Bhoze Ghat section of the G.I.P. Railway has been prohibited since 1869. The restriction has now been removed, as it is considered that the works on this Ghat are already so thoroughly weathered that the risk of running trains at night during the monsoon is very much minimised. The experiment will, writes Indian Engineering, be made during the approaching monsoon for the first time, and its continuance in subsequent years will depend upon results. Special precautions against accidents will be taken. Over the Braganza Ghat, at the junction of the Southern Mahratta with the West of India Portuguese Railway, night running of trains during the rains is prohibited.

AT the meeting of the Bombay Millowners' Association held on Tuesday, on the motion of Mr. George Cotton, the following resolution was carried unanimously:—"That the chairman and secretary of the mill operatives' meeting, held on the 20th of April, 1890, be informed that this Association cannot comply with the request in their memorial to cancel the resolution to close the mills for eight days per month for three months; but that, on the expiration of the three months the members of this Association think it desirable to close their mills for one day in every seven, such day to be Sunday in each week, unless some Native festival intervenes of such interest to the majority of the operatives that it is desirable to observe it as a holiday in lieu of Sunday; further that on the day preceding the weekly holiday the mills will close two hours earlier than on ordinary working days for the purpose of cleaning the machinery."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE death-rate in the Punjab this hot weather has been unusually high. The last returns published, for the week ending May 3, show that the rate was twelve per thousand higher than the average for the corresponding week in the five preceding years, and it was still rising. In the forty-nine large municipal towns it was forty-four per mille, the highest figure being eighty-nine in Sirsa and eighty-seven in Shahabad. The excessive mortality was chiefly due to fever, over 10,000 deaths from this cause alone occurring weekly.

THE man who it was thought was Harpal, the dacoit, and who was arrested at Meerut, turns out to be a karinda named Mahomed Ali Khan, of Meerut. On being taken before the tahsildar to have his statement recorded the man is reported to have said:—"You, sir, recognise me yourself. I called yesterday and paid in Government revenue, and here is the receipt for the same. The police are determined to convert me into Harpal, the dacoit." The man was discharged.

LADY LANSDOWNE held a meeting of the Central Committee of the Dufferin Fund at Viceregal Lodge on the 4th instant. There were present his Honour Sir James Lyall, Sir Andrew Scoble, and Hon. Mr. Hutchins, Mr. C. J. Lyall and Surgeon-General Rice taking their seats as members of the Committee for the first time. The Central Committee decided to form three new scholarships to be held at the principal colleges in India, owing to the large number of applications recently received from ladies who are desirous of pursuing a medical career.

ONE of the finest houses in Bareilly, the property of Nawab Nunna Jan, and well known as the Lal Kothi, was completely burned down on the night of the 6th inst. Fortunately for the adjacent houses the storm which had been blowing incessantly for the past two days ceased a couple of hours before. The Kothi had only recently been purchased by the Nawab. It was unoccupied, but had a few days previously been engaged, the tenant intending to move in in the course of the next day or two. The fire is believed to be the work of an incendiary.

JUDGMENT was pronounced at Allahabad on the 31st ult. in the Pilibhit case, in which Anieer Ahmed, a wealthy zemindar, was accused of abducting the daughter of Haji Kudrat Ali. The Judge found that the girl, on the date of abduction, was over sixteen years of age, that up to date of abduction no ceremony of marriage had been gone through, and that the girl had undoubtedly been carried off by force. In passing a sentence of one year's simple imprisonment the Judge said he took into account the fact that some reparation had been made by the accused, inasmuch as he had since legally and rightly married the girl. This case was one of unusual interest, owing to the social position of the parties.

A DENSE cloud of locusts passed over Lucknow on Wednesday noon, the vast army travelling from about south-west to north-east. The sky was quite darkened with them, and although some dropped down, there was no attempt at settling, so far as the civil lines are concerned; whilst all the kites and crows and birds of all sorts had a "high old time" of it as the army passed along overhead. A cantonment correspondent says a trifle of a million or two lighted thereabouts, but there are no crops now to injure, and leaves are not especially succulent just at present.

MR. COLQUHOUN'S CORRESPONDENCE.

The following is the correspondence between Mr. Colquhoun, late of the Burma Civil Service, and the Chief Commissioner:—

"Mogok, 30-1-1889.

"My Dear Moylan,—1. Yours of 18th to hand, returning letter from Mr. Walter and Macgregor. [Times manager and its correspondent in Calcutta.]

"2. I guessed that the reference to A. P. MacDonnell [Home Secretary in Calcutta] should have been as you explain. I am glad that he is likely to come, and that he is an intimate friend of yours.

"3. D—'s management of the N. S. States is a scandal. He works direct with the C. C. Hildebrand and the Cr. N. Dn. (Col. Strover) are quite ignored. Fancy the political charge of all the Northern States with a population of some 2,000,000 people, and relations with Chinese frontier, entrusted to a young lieutenant. They require an experienced man, the best to be had—say, Hildebrand or Parrott. When reference is made to this by you or Hannay [proprietor, Rangoon Gazette] see that information cannot be traced to me.

"4. I write to McDonald [late of the Times] to-day re appointment of Symes, also re Thirkell White's late acting appointment, which doubtless means he is to be soon again acting as a commissioner. The insurrection in the Yaw district was a bad business, and from what one hears Eyre was badly treated.

"5. Regarding affairs in this part of the world, my telegrams will have kept you fairly well informed regarding the very serious movement which has been stopped by my action in garrisoning Momeit (capital) and in delivering a severe blow to the advance band (300) of Saw Yannine when within eight miles of the capital.

"I wired you for advice as to an article in the twenty-second issue of the Mandalay Herald. I enclose you copies of the correspondence between myself and C.C. [Chief Commissioner: Sir Charles Crosthwaite], which will show you how I have been treated in this matter. The military authorities were annoyed because I insisted on holding and maintaining Momeit, and have tried to put down the 'ill-considered enterprise' of Nugent [a young officer who has just been killed] on the 14th to my score. He was expressly forbidden by me to undertake any operations. The successful blow delivered on 19th to this band shows how little of 'enterprise' there was in attacking Mobong. Colonel Strover dropped me in the matter, and I received orders not to send troops or police in future to Momeit (State) without orders. This was unfortunate for him, as Twinng (in Momeit State, near River) was attacked and burnt on the 22nd, and the C. C. wired me the information, and I had to telegraph to Colonel Strover for his orders instead of acting promptly. I was actually in Momeit (capital) from 29th December to evening of 3rd January, with nine military police (four of them ill) before the detachment called for by me came, and after that the A.A.Q.M.G. recalled it, but I kept them there. You can judge from this the encouragement received by me for acting promptly and successfully. D. has been since last June endeavouring to gain the submission of Khan Healing, Saw Yannine, and Mainlong Nga Maung, with the result that the whole borders are up. He seems to have been fooled to the top of his bent by the Sawbwaw of Thibaw and Taunybaing, who were to get these men in. He is the 'Sir Oracle' with C. C., Thirkell White, &c. T. W. is a great chum of his. Even with a good man trouble will come; how much more with a green, self-sufficient lad in charge? The whole N.E. frontier should be strengthened, and we should meddle as little as possible with Chins, Kachins, and other hill tribes, and not allow ourselves to be led into expeditions into most difficult hill country.—Yours very truly.

(Signed) "A. R. COLQUHOUN.

"P. S.—The proposed establishment of a post at Lashio, under Daly, with a few hundred raw military police (newly enlisted) is a veritable piece of madness. It would be 12 days beyond our outposts, and no communication kept up.

(Signed) "A. R. C.

"Glad to hear Eddiss has joined you. I know his brother, a very good fellow at Calcutta."

The Government House, Mandalay, February 4, 1889.
From the Private Secretary of the Chief Commissioner:—

"I am to say that you enclosed, in your letter under reply, a letter from you to Mr. Moylan. As this letter was not in an envelope, Sir Charles Crosthwaite though it was intended for his perusal, and began to read it before he perceived the nature of its contents. Sir Charles Crosthwaite has no desire to take advantage of an accident, although he considers the disloyalty and treachery evidenced by your letter deserve little consideration. It is however, a question of public importance that officers should act honestly and loyally towards the Government they are serving, and that the Government should know the character of the men serving under it, and therefore the letter, with a statement of the manner in which it came into his hands, and a copy of this letter, has been submitted to his Excellency the Viceroy by Sir Charles Crosthwaite."

"From Mr. E. K. Moylan, to Secretary to Government of India, Home Department:—

"Sir,—I have become aware that a private letter, addressed to me by Mr. A. R. Colquhoun, has been intercepted by Sir Charles Crosthwaite, and that he has detained it, and kept it in his possession for some months. I do not give detailed evidence of these statements at present, because I am informed that the Government of India have evidence of the facts before them. If, however, the Government of India require any evidence of the detention of the letter, I am prepared to furnish ample proof of the fact."

"I thereupon address the following letter to Sir Charles Crosthwaite:—

"From E. K. Moylan, to H. T. White, Chief Secretary to Chief Commissioner:—

"Sir,—It has come to my knowledge that the Chief Commissioner has intercepted and detained for some time a letter addressed to me by Mr. A. R. Colquhoun. That letter I have been informed on the best authority was posted by Mr. Colquhoun at Mogok in an envelope addressed to me.

"I have now to call upon the Chief Commissioner to immediately send me the letter in question, which he had no right whatever to detain.

"To avoid confusion and delay, and in case the Chief Commissioner should have intercepted or have opened, or have in his possession other letters addressed to me, I beg to state that the one I asked for is dated Mogok, 30th Jan., 1889.

"An early reply will oblige me, as I desire, if the letter is not at once sent to me, to take other steps.—Yours, &c.,

(Signed) E. K. MOYLAN."

"I believe the Government of India are aware that Mr. Colquhoun has solemnly declared that he posted the letter in question at Mogok in a sealed envelope addressed to me. On the other hand, I am informed that Sir Charles Crosthwaite asserts that the letter fell into his hands owing to its having been placed by mistake in an envelope addressed to him, and sent him through the post.

"I submit that, whether Mr. Colquhoun's plain and straightforward statement is believed, or Sir Charles Crosthwaite's apocryphal story be accepted, it makes absolutely no difference as to my right to have the letter given up to me. The question of whether Sir Charles Crosthwaite did or did not open a letter addressed to another person can merely affect the question of the nature and extent of the offence which he has committed. Even if Sir Charles Crosthwaite's statement is true, it can afford no jurisdiction for now detaining my letter.

"On this question I would desire briefly to point out that every person who detains a posted letter is liable to two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine. Sir Charles Crosthwaite has, therefore, rendered himself liable to severe punishment.

"I have, therefore, to ask the Government of India to direct Sir Charles Crosthwaite immediately to deliver up to me the letter written to me by Mr. A. R. Colquhoun.

"I should have before now prosecuted Sir Charles Crosthwaite in a criminal court, but that some legal difficulties might arise.

"I have further to ask the Government of India to grant me sanction to prosecute Sir Charles Crosthwaite criminally for the gross and flagrant breach of the law he has committed.—Yours,

(Signed) "E. K. MOYLAN."

"THE WEALTH OF INDIA."

(Financial News.)

A GENTLEMAN, claiming to be an authority upon matters of finance, one declared that India was verging on the bottomless gulf of bankruptcy. To those who share that opinion it may be somewhat startling to come across a pamphlet having for its title "The Wealth of India." The pamphlet in question is a print of the address recently delivered by Mr. William Birkmyre before a meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and, in truth, its title is somewhat misleading. Mr. Birkmyre speedily confesses that it would be impossible for him to give anything approaching to an inventory of the wealth of India, and that his aim is really to dwell upon the wealth-creating faculties of the Indian race. In such faculties, no doubt, the potential wealth of the country largely consists, and, in emphasising this, Mr. Birkmyre, who seems to possess considerable knowledge of his subject, has done good service, for, undoubtedly, the question is one which excites far too little general interest.

The apathy of the House of Commons, and, it may be added, of the mercantile community, in regard to the affairs of the Indian Empire is only too conspicuous. Questions of vital importance in connection with Indian affairs draw but a very thin attendance in the popular assembly, whereas when the political pot is calling the political kettle black, or if there be some sensational question to be addressed to Ministers, our eager legislators flock to the front, and tread upon each other's toes in their ambition to be present at the exciting moment. It is to be remembered that the House of Commons is the Executive, not only for this country, but for India, although it has deputed what is supposed to be a council of specialists to administer Indian affairs, and Mr. Birkmyre is justified in saying that the manner in which the Executive discharges its duty towards India does not command the approval of those who are interested in the subject. It is probably true that the conservancy of the parks in London receives far more attention during some sessions of Parliament than do the great concerns of the Indian Empire. As an illustration of the feebleness of action apparent on the part of the House of Commons it is pointed out that, although India is a purely agricultural country, yet the Executive has delegated agriculture to one of the minor scientific departments of the Empire, herein affording a striking contrast to the methods of America, where the Executive is fully in touch with the requirements of the country.

Mr. Birkmyre pays a just tribute to the character of the Indian race, and aptly compares it with that of the people of Brazil. In India natives have the fixed habit of industry, the which, doubtless, is the main factor for making India not merely potentially, but actually, wealthy. Brazil, like India, is a tropical country. It has twenty provinces, and contains over three millions of square miles—that is to say, more than double the area of India; yet, with all its magnificent rivers, grand natural harbours, and tropical profusion, the inhabitants, being averse to settled habits of industry, are unable to turn the resources of the country to good account. They lack, as Mr. Birkmyre says, the wealth-creating faculty, and their numbers and works still remain insignificant. We are disposed to think that Mr. Birkmyre could have made a good deal more of his subject, but his pamphlet, as far as it goes, is interesting and valuable. It deserves to be noticed as dealing with a topic of vast, but unrecognised, importance. India has hitherto been treated as a poor, and frequently tiresome, relation; but there are well-informed persons who hold that, judging from the measure of her national debt, she is really opulent, because of her vast revenue-earning capacity and the successful discharge of the enormous costs of conquest. Repeated famines and repeated frontier wars have left the country still elastic. Prima facie, says Mr. Birkmyre, a country must be wealthy which sustains, without the aid of a poor law 250,000,000 of people, and which imports in increasing quantities so many articles of luxury.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE FIRST BRITISH RIFLE CORPS.*

Captain Willoughby Verner is well known as an excellent and scientific officer, whose notes on rapid field-sketching, reconnaissance, and military topography have met with unqualified approval throughout the services. But he is also an enthusiastic Rifleman, and justly proud of the honour of belonging to that Rifle Brigade which has done such magnificent service in every battle-field in which England has been engaged during the past century, and which claims to be the "First British Rifle Corps." We never thought that claim had been disputed until we read the preface to Captain Verner's most interesting little work now before us, in which he mentions that not only in the army and among the general public, but in the minds of Riflemen themselves, doubts have been felt as to which was the first Corps of British Riflemen. "Fifty years ago," says Captain Verner, "such a question would have been dismissed as capable of but one reply; but as time lapses so does the memory of men fade for things which do not immediately concern themselves." So far as the question referred to goes, the gallant compiler of this book shows beyond all dispute that his own splendid regiment was without doubt the first corps of British Riflemen formed for service in the English Army, and he proves this from books, documents, and records, which must have cost him no little time and trouble to find and examine. Captain Verner gives a complete authentic narrative of the formation of the regiment, from its being first raised as an "experimental corps of riflemen"

* "The First British Rifle Corps." By Captain Willoughby Verner. (W. H. Allen and Co.).

in 1800, until the date of the Horse Guards Order of January 22nd, 1862, when Her Majesty, "desiring to perpetuate the remembrance of her beloved husband's connection with the Rifle Brigade," was pleased to command that it should bear the designation of "The Prince Consort's Own Rifle Brigade"—a title subsequently amended to the present designation, "The Rifle Brigade (The Prince Consort's Own)."

Captain Verner also gives the history of "The 60th (or Royal American) Regiment."

The little book is one which will be read with interest not only by the riflemen of the two corps, but generally throughout the service. It is of historical value, and should find a place in every regimental and garrison library.

The July number of the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) contains several papers of interest to Service readers, but some of which—such as that on "Forced Draught in Boilers"—may be a little too profound for civilian critics. "The Crimean Epoch" might have been better if not less tersely told, and it would not have suffered by losing the frontispiece with which it is illustrated—a coloured plate supposed to represent the battle of Inkermann. With this exception the other illustrations in the number are up to the usual mark. There is one contribution which should have special interest for Anglo-Indian readers—that by Lieutenant-General Sale Hill, on "The True Story of Jellalabad." It is a most interesting paper, written in defence of the memory of the gallant Sale against the aspersions put upon that memory in the publication of Captain Broadfoot's Life, in which publication certain letters and extracts from diaries were given, leading it to be supposed that Sale did not deserve the credit he got for the defence of Jellalabad. We felt certain at the time, when we noticed that book, that there must be some answer forthcoming sooner or later to the reflections cast upon Sale. That answer now appears, and as General Sale Hill quotes from original and authentic papers in his own possession, we must add that his remarks carry conviction with them. It is to be regretted that any such controversial wrangling over gallant dead men's reputations should occur, but having occurred it is well that the truth should be told, and we think it is so in General Sale Hill's most interesting paper.

The United Service Gazette (W. H. Allen and Co.) for July continues to keep the position it assumed under its new management. Sir George Tryon contributes a third article on National Insurance—a subject the importance of which cannot be well over-rated, although opinions may differ about Admiral Tryon's recommendations. There are three papers discussing the best mounted arm for the Volunteers, in which the unfortunate Yeomanry do not come in for unmerited praise, but Sir Evelyn Wood sums up the whole case in a clever, cautious way, which leave, however, still much to be desired. Colonel Maurice's contribution on Napoleon's responsibility for French failure at Waterloo is a thoughtful and interesting one, such as one would expect from this distinguished military essayist, who writes a preface also to Captain Gawne's translation of Part II. of the very remarkable German pamphlet, "A Summer Night's Dream." A German staff officer discourses on the Rearmament of the German Army, and gives astounding information of the extraordinary powers of the new German rifle. To non-professional readers the most attractive paper in the magazine will possibly be Sir Samuel Baker's on the "African Mania," which treats of the present anxiety of the European Powers "to possess themselves rightly or wrongly of what belongs to others, without the slightest consideration for the original proprietors." So far as our own nation is concerned Sir Samuel Baker says:—"It would appear almost brutal to march into the heart of Africa with a banner inscribed by the word 'Dividends.' Therefore, although a nation of traders, we never indulge in sentimental annexation without some expectant profits; we follow a flag embroidered by the more noble declaration, 'We civilise.' By this programme we disarm suspicion, and we encourage others who might otherwise hesitate to embark their sympathies and fortunes in our undertaking." This is neatly and tersely put.

In last week's issue of the Gazette of India it is gravely announced that the "Christian names of Surgeon Fayle are Robert James Luck, and not as stated in the Gazette of March 10, 1882." Better late than never, but we trust the gallant surgeon has not suffered much during these eight long years.

It is estimated that over 2,000 Mahomedans, bound for Mecca, have passed through Calcutta during the past week from the eastern districts of the province, on their way to Bombay for embarkation for Jeddah. The expenses of several of these have been defrayed by the wealthier of the community, notably by Sir Abdul Ganny Meah and Nawab Ashunoola of Dacca.

INDIAN ARMY REFORM.—III.

IN forwarding the draft of the General Order in the Military Department, which the Secretary of State required from the Government of India, Lord Dufferin enclosed a Minute from himself in the official despatch sent from the Viceroy in Council. In that Minute he summarised the leading principle of the proposals made—viz., that the Army administration should be so contrived as to permit decentralisation in such military business as was not of the first importance, while the supreme financial and administrative power should remain in the hands of the Governor-General in Council, and, further, that the Commander-in-Chief in India should be placed in command of the whole army of India, instead of his powers being confined chiefly to the control of the Bengal Army. His Excellency also pointed out that in respect to the organisation of the Indian Army it was desired to maintain, in the most complete form, the separation of the Bengal Army from the armies of Madras and Bombay, and to divide the Bengal Army into two parts, in accordance, generally, with the recruitment of that army in Hindustan and the Punjab.

"Each of the four armies of Madras, Bombay, Hindustan, and the Punjab is to be commanded by a Lieutenant-General Commanding, assisted by a strong General Staff.

"The Commander-in-Chief in India will deal directly with a certain class of departmental business, but he will now also become Commander in reality, as well as in name, over the whole of the military forces of India, with the single exception of those forces which are for political reasons retained under the direction of the Government of India, and instead of commanding one army of 120,000 men, he will now command four armies aggregating 204,000 men. His Excellency will also be charged with all the important questions relating to the discipline, efficiency, equipment, training, education, and mobilisation of the whole Army of India; and with the additional duties which will now be laid upon him, he will, it appears to me, have such constant and active occupation as could only be possible when combined with a certain freedom from the detailed and executive business of the Bengal Army."

His Excellency goes on to say that in upholding these views he does not found his opinions on mere theoretical considerations, but bases them on the experience gained by him during his tenure of office, and he concludes:—

"The change in administration and organisation by the abolition of the Presidential Army system, supported by me in 1885, and again in our Despatch of May, 1888, seems to me to be a complement of all the improvements which the Army system in India has of late years undergone. When that has been carried out, as I hope it will be at no distant date, and when the mobilisation scheme has been brought into practical effect, then those who come after us will have but to perfect the military machinery to assist in maintaining the splendid reputation of the Indian Army, to improve the conditions of military finance, and to preserve the form of Military Administration which is dealt with in the draft General Orders now before us."

This was the last Minute written by Lord Dufferin as Viceroy of India on a military subject.

Lord Lansdowne, however, took up the matter as warmly as his predecessor had done. The Secretary of State for India having declared himself unable to enter into the large question of military reorganisation, having been advised that, "in order to give effect to any measure for the formal withdrawal of the armies of Madras and Bombay from the direct control of those Governments, recourse must be had to Imperial legislation." A despatch, dated July 5, 1889, was sent in reply from the Governor-General in Council, in which Lord Lansdowne and his colleagues thus plead in favour of the proposed changes:—

"Four successive Governments of India have supported the proposals which were put forward by the Army Organisation Commission ten years ago. The alterations proposed in the administration of the Army are not merely for the purpose of remedying inconveniences, but to impart a practical and working form to an accidental organisation which, in the course of time, has developed into a cumbrous and complicated machinery. We desire, therefore, once again to place before Her Majesty's Government our conviction that it would be a misfortune of the greatest moment if this amendment of the military administration, which we consider to be essential to the efficiency of the army in this country, should not be carried out in the breathing time of peace, which we fortunately now possess; and if the desired change, so persistently and impartially advocated by the Government of India, were to be postponed until the disastrous experience of war should force upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity for effecting this most necessary reform of the Indian Army system.

"We conclude this despatch with the earnest hope that your lordship may be able before long to undertake the necessary legislation. That legislation, we are assured, need not be of an extensive character. It would be complementary to the various measures proposed in your Despatch of the 30th May, and would but carry to a legitimate conclusion the progressive administrative changes of recent years. We hope, too, that with the history and facts of the question placed before those concerned in discussing a matter so gravely affecting the welfare of India would not fail to appreciate the necessity for a reform which has been unanimously supported and urged for many years past by the Government of India under successive Viceroys, and would be prepared to deal with that reform on public grounds without distinction of party."

A more persuasive and urgent appeal has seldom appeared in an official Despatch. How it has been met will be seen in the report of the debate in the House of Lords on Friday last, which will be found in another column, and which we can do no more than allude to today.

THE people of Ceylon, it seems, deprecate the idea of effecting a physical union of their island with India by means of a railroad across Rama's Bridge. They wish to preserve the "inviolability" of the Crown colony, and dread the political absorption which, they fear, must inevitably follow any such union.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—JUNE 27.

—:O:—

THE ARMY IN INDIA.

The Marquis of RIPON rose to call attention to the papers relating to the organisation of the Army in India, and especially to the recommendation of successive Governments of India in favour of the abolition of the existing arrangements for the command-in-chief of the Madras and Bombay armies. He said the subject was first gone into in 1879, in the time of Lord Lytton, when an inquiry was made into the whole organisation of the Indian Army. Lord Lytton's Commission went very carefully into the whole matter, and made a most complete and able report, with minutes and appendices. Although the minutes showed that there was some difference of opinion among the members of Lord Lytton's Government on the point of which he was now drawing attention, there was no doubt whatever of the Viceroy's own opinion, because in an able minute he said that under the present system the armies of Madras and Bombay were neither independent armies nor part of one great army in the East, and that all the evils of provincialism were maintained without the advantages of independence. The Government which succeeded, of which he had the honour of being a member, were, in the winter of 1881, expressly directed to take up the report of Lord Lytton's Commission by the then Secretary of State, Lord Hartington. They did so, and went into the matter very thoroughly. They sent no less than fifteen despatches to the India Office, and with a single exception, that of the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. Haines, the Government of India were, on the present point, at all event, absolutely unanimous in their recommendations. Sir F. Haines differed from them; but he was succeeded by a man possessing, he thought he might say without question, the largest experience of any living man on military affairs in India—he meant Sir D. Stewart—who cordially concurred in the recommendations of the Government, as did all his other colleagues at that time. Now upon the point to which he was directing attention they also took the same view as had been taken by the Commission of Lord Lytton, and they recommended that the two presidential commanders-in-chief of Madras and Bombay should be abolished, that the Madras and Bombay armies should be commanded by two lieutenant-generals, and that there should be unity of command under the Commander-in-Chief of India. They never proposed for one moment to abolish the separate armies of Madras and Bombay. Lord Lytton, using a very pertinent expression, spoke of the armies of India as being in watertight compartments. They never proposed to alter that watertight system. It had been sometimes said that they were advocates of an extreme system of centralisation. That was altogether a mistake. They did not desire more centralisation. On the contrary, they submitted several proposals in exactly the opposite direction. But the principle upon which they desired to base the reorganisation of the Indian Army was the principle of unity of command and administration in the hands of the Commander-in-Chief, but not too close centralisation. The main object of the changes proposed was the increase of efficiency, and they believed that some economy, though not a very large economy, would result from it. When the expedition was being sent to Candahar the Government of India had to select the officers who were to command the troops. That expedition was ordered by telegraph with the greatest possible rapidity. The names of the officers selected to command the Bengal troops were duly submitted to the Government of India by the Commander-in-Chief, and he felt it to be his duty as Viceroy to consider the position and services of the officers so recommended. But when he made the same inquiry with respect to the Bombay troops he found that the information he asked for could not be obtained as to the Bombay officers, and that the officers had been appointed by the Bombay Government, and were in command of their brigades. In these circumstances, therefore, even if he had hesitated with respect to the qualifications of officers, he could not have had any real means of controlling the choice which had been made. Then his noble friend Lord Dufferin, who succeeded him, was in no hurry to deal with this question. It was four years before he wrote his despatch on the subject, but in June, 1888, having given the question the fullest and most careful consideration, Lord Dufferin addressed the Government at home on the subject. Their lordships would observe that, like himself, Lord Dufferin had actual experience of this system in time of war, because he had been engaged in the supervision of the military operations which took place in Burma. When the despatch of Lord Dufferin arrived in England, what course did the noble viscount the Secretary of State take? He sent a telegram to Lord Dufferin requesting that the Government of India would prepare a General Order with full and minute details. The Government of India undertook that task, and in the Blue-book their lordships would find a very long General Order in most minute detail. With this draft General Order a minute was sent home by Lord Dufferin, in which he described the leading principles upon which the draft General Order had been founded. The leading principle of those proposals was that the army administration should be so contrived as to permit decentralisation of such military business as was not of the first importance, while the supreme financial and administrative power should remain with the Governor-General in Council, but that the Commander-in-Chief in India should be placed in the command of the whole army in India. This elaborate scheme was sent home, and was no doubt fully considered by the noble viscount and his Council; but the result had been that the noble viscount did not feel himself in a position to accept this part of the proposals of the Government of India. The noble viscount said that he found himself unable to enter into the different questions of military administration which had been so ably put forward; that, in order to carry out what was proposed, recourse must be had to Imperial legislation; that Her Majesty's Government considered that such a course would be highly inexpedient, as it would certainly give rise to discussions which must cause delay prejudicial to the public service; and he could not deem it advisable to deal with the reconstruction of the Indian military system on any less comprehensive basis. He now arrived at the administration of the fourth Viceroy in connection with this question. What was the opinion of Lord Lansdowne? Lord Lansdowne's Government might have left the question alone; but so strongly did his Government feel on the subject that he expressed in the very strongest terms their view of the question. He said that his Government desired to impress upon Her Majesty's Government that it would be a misfortune if this amendment of the military administration, which they considered to be essential to the efficiency of the Army in India, should not be carried out in a time of peace, which they fortunately now possessed, or until a disastrous experience of war should force upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity of effecting these most necessary reforms. It was impossible to use stronger language. Here, then, were four successive Viceroys of India all combined in recommending this change. They were men of very different training, and belonged to very different parties. They had none of them any preconceived opinions on the subject—he could say that certainly of himself—they all went most carefully into the question, and three of them had experience of wars in the East. These proposals had the support of two successive Commanders-in-Chief. There could not be a stronger case for inducing Her Majesty's Government to take steps for dealing with the question on what the noble lord said was the only satisfactory footing on which it could stand. The Government of India should always be in a state of preparation for war. It had always been his belief, as well as that of Governors of greater experience than himself, that the Indian Army should be always in a state to take the field at any moment. But they could not secure that unless they had a sound system of organisation, and they could not have a sound system of organisation unless they secured unity of administration. It was a very serious thing to disregard repeated warnings. If Her Majesty's Government had brought in a Bill and had failed to carry it the responsibility would not be theirs. But when the noble viscount said that this great reform, recommended in such strong language by successive Governments of India, could not be effected simply because the Bill could not pass, an argument of that description was fraught with the most serious consequences. He would say that the Government were urgently called upon to take this question into consideration and to deal with it. He urged on them to give effect to the recommendations of successive Governors of India, men who had experience of working the present system in peace and in war, and who were unanimous in saying that it was one which they regarded with the most serious apprehension—(hear, hear).

Viscount Cross said he was not at all sorry to have heard the speech of the noble marquis. He was quite aware that this was a matter which had engaged the attention of several Governments of India for a long time past, and that the noble marquis had taken the same view as Lord Dufferin and Lord Lansdowne. The noble marquis said that these Governors-General had taken the greatest trouble in considering the question before addressing the Government at home. The despatches which had been sent home went very fully into the matter, and used every possible argument. The noble earl opposite (the Earl of Kimberley) was at the India Office when the noble marquis addressed the Government on the subject, and he had to draw up the despatch in answer to the pressing demand of the Indian Government. The noble earl went very fully into the question, but he alleged certain reasons why he was not inclined to accept the decision of the Government of India upon the point. There was no doubt that the military authorities in this country and in India had been very much divided on this subject. Although the noble marquis, when Viceroy, and his council recommended this reform, yet there was undoubtedly a considerable weight of authority on the other side among military men. Under these circumstances the noble earl opposite, when Secretary of State for India, in a despatch, expressed the views of the then Government that it would be inexpedient to ask Parliament to legislate. The despatch pointed out that they did not find such a weight of authority in favour of the proposed change as would justify them in recommending to Parliament so fundamental and extensive a change. That Government went out, and when he was appointed Secretary of State he consulted all the military authorities he could find, and among these none were stronger in their opposition to this proposed change than the illustrious Duke the Commander-in-Chief and the late Lord Napier of Magdala. In this state of military opinion he came to the conclusion that there was little chance of a Bill carrying out that change passing through Parliament. Under these circumstances he considered what best could be done. He did not like to delay certain other reforms which were desirable, and he cast about to see whether they could not carry out a substantial amount of the required reforms. Accordingly, certain reforms had been carried out in regard to the military accounts, the commissariat, transport, and military works. He did not desire to express any definite opinion on the subject of this suggested change, but to the question whether Her Majesty's Government were prepared to introduce a Bill on the subject, his reply was that this matter, as well as others in regard to military organisation in India, were under consideration. It was peculiarly desirable that if and when they were dealt with there should be some finality about the settlement arrived at—(hear, hear).

The Earl of KIMBERLEY was glad that his noble friend had brought this subject before the House, which was one of very great importance in regard to Indian administration. This was a matter which threw upon the Secretary of State a grave responsibility in its decision, and on succeeding Lord Hartington at the India Office he found that that noble lord had considered the subject, but had arrived at no definite conclusion. He could not agree with his noble friend that there was only one side to this question—(hear, hear). It was particularly a matter in which different considerations had to be balanced. No doubt, in a European country, where the population was homogeneous, it would certainly be best to have one supreme command, and no independent commands. But the circumstances of India were very peculiar. The present system had grown up under fortuitous circumstances, and had adapted itself to those circumstances—(hear, hear). The question was not merely a military one, but in some respects a political one. It was, for instance, desirable, as he had pointed out in one of his despatches, that in unforeseen circumstances the army of each Presidency should be capable of acting vigorously by itself—(hear, hear). When Secretary of State he had had the advantage of very excellent military advice from Sir Henry Norman, a very distinguished officer, and he arrived at the result that there was an almost equal division of opinion on this subject. The noble viscount opposite had stated the difficulty he (Lord Kimberley) felt in going to Parliament under those circumstances. Of course, he could not adduce any authority of his own on the subject, and he would have had to show very strong military reasons for the change. He was very well aware that some very able men were in favour of the change. Sir Donald Stewart was so at that time, and Sir Frederick Roberts was now. It might be that Sir Henry Norman and those who advised him gave, perhaps, too much attention to internal movements; but although he trusted that no great crisis might arise in India, it never could be said that the Government of India might not again have to deal with some circumstances of internal disorder. But there were other considerations which influenced him in his actions, consideration, the force of which, he thought, his noble friend fully admitted. There was the very great difference between the populations from which the Madras army was entirely, and the Bombay army was partially recruited, and there was also the danger that the central Government, being placed at Calcutta, a great distance both from Bombay and Madras, would not be so completely in touch with the Presidencies as the local Governments would necessarily be. With considerable reluctance and hesitation, therefore, he came to the conclusion that he could not advise the Government to go to Parliament, at that time at all events, with a Bill. He conscientiously believed that he had no such case as would justify him in proposing the change to Parliament. But how did the matter stand at the present time? It was undoubtedly a very great fact that two other Viceroys so able as Lord Dufferin and the Marquis of Lansdowne had repeated in the strongest language the opinion that the Government would incur a very grave responsibility if they neglected to carry out this reform; and in addition to that there were certainly arguments in recent despatches which presented new considerations which did not exist at the time he had had to deal with the matter. Two great changes had taken place which must be taken into consideration—one the new condition of affairs on the frontier of Afghanistan, and the other the acquisition of the whole of Burma. The first was, perhaps, the widest and most serious matter. We had now occupied a very advanced position and had created Quetta a first-class military station; and had made it one of the most important points in the whole of the Indian Empire. Formerly we had practically only to consider internal danger. Unfortunately, now, although affairs happily wore a peaceful aspect, all were obliged to admit that we had on our frontier a great Power with whom we might have some day to deal; and, therefore, the question the Government had to deal with was really the defence of the frontier, and in that respect it was of the utmost importance that the power of administration should be strengthened in the hands of the central Government. As regarded Burma, a very large possession, their lordships could easily see how inconvenient it would be that the large army engaged in that country should be directed by the local Government of Madras. He felt convinced that military administration in India must year by year become of a more and more centralised character. To sum the whole matter up, he confessed that in the face of the opinion of four successive Viceroys, covering a period of ten years, an opinion expressed in the most uncompromising manner, he would now have great hesitation before he refused to listen to them. He thought, too, that the recent experience of Sir Donald Stewart and Sir Frederick Roberts ought to carry great weight. Therefore, for his part, he could only say that if Her Majesty's Government should come to the conclusion that the time had arrived when they could introduce a Bill for the purpose of carrying these recommendations into effect, they would have no opposition from him—(hear, hear).

The Earl of NORTHBROOK said it was a curious fact that, although four successive Viceroys had advocated this change, Lord Hartington, Lord Kimberley, Lord Randolph Churchill, and the noble viscount opposite had all, after full consideration, felt themselves unable to give effect to the recommendations that had come from India. He entirely agreed with the views that had been expressed on the subject with so much clearness and ability by Lord Kimberley and Lord Dufferin. He did not think that the Government should act upon the papers which they had before them, because if they did so it would lead to centralisation, which would give rise to a very serious danger.

The Duke of CAMBRIDGE said that he had had an opportunity of hearing the opinions of some of the leading military men who had been in India, and he could endorse the remark of the noble lord, the Earl of Kimberley, when he said that on military subjects they should not go against the opinions and advice of such authorities as the late Lord Napier and others. He had had numerous and constant conversations with those distinguished officers, who had said that it would be a most ticklish and delicate thing to interfere with the three commands in order to centralise them, and that the change would be so great that they hoped it would be made. He strongly urged the Government to be most careful in any alterations which they might make in doing away with the two minor commands.

LORD REAY'S RESIGNATION.

Mr. BRYCE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, with reference to the statements made in India and here respecting Lord Reay's offer to resign the office of Governor of Bombay, it was the fact that although Lord Reay did not tender his resignation to the Secretary of State for India he did make a communication to the Viceroy on the subject.

Sir J. GORST: The statement which I was instructed by the Secretary of State to make in this House on May 8, that Lord Reay never tendered his resignation of the governorship of Bombay, was correct, but the Secretary of State has been unofficially informed that Lord Reay, by a secret and confidential telegram, the text of which was not communicated to the Secretary of State, intimated to the Viceroy that he would resign in the event of the Mamlutdars being dismissed; and my noble friend has been further unofficially informed that the Viceroy succeeded in dissuading Lord Reay from tendering his resignation.

JUNE 26.

THE MAHARAJAH OF CASHMERE.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the Under Secretary for India when the repeatedly promised papers relating to Cashmere would be presented to the House.

Sir J. GORST: I have to-day laid the papers on the table. The action of the Government in Cashmere has been based not upon grave personal charges made against the Maharajah, but upon the long-continued misgovernment of Cashmere, which rendered it necessary in the interest of the people to put an end to the chronic oppression and misrule. Neither the Secretary of State nor the Government of India, as I have several times stated in Parliament, have ever attached any importance to certain treasonable and criminal correspondence attributed to the Maharajah. It is obvious that the conduct of the Government in making such arrangements as involve the withdrawal of the Maharajah for a time on political grounds from active participation in the government of the State cannot be made the subject of investigation by a judicial officer.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked the right hon. gentleman when the papers were likely to be circulated among members; and whether, if the papers disclosed a state of things different from what he had stated to the House, the Government would afford an opportunity to this unfortunate gentleman to repel the accusations made against him, which he declared to be wholly without foundation.

Sir J. GORST said he had no control over the printing authorities, and he could not say definitely when the papers would be circulated. As to the second question, he thought it would be well for the hon. member to delay it until he had seen the papers.

Mr. BRADLAUGH said that, in view of the exceeding gravity of the matter, he should avail himself of such forms of the House as would permit him to bring the subject forward, unless the Government gave the Maharajah an opportunity to answer the charges.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

THE relief of the detachment of the King's Royal Rifles stationed at Chunar by a detachment of the Connaught Rangers, which was recently directed, has been postponed until further orders.

In the Russian manoeuvres which will take place this year in the neighbourhood of Rovno the armies of the Kief and Warsaw military districts will take part. About 150,000 men will be assembled in camp.

A DISTRICT court-martial at Quetta on May 3rd sentenced Sub-Assistant Apothecary Adolphus Lee Hurley, of the Subordinate Medical Department, to be dismissed the service for drunkenness whilst on duty and for drunkenness whilst under arrest. The dismissal has been confirmed.

At a general court-martial, held at Ranikhet on April 15th, Private Lewis Gilks, of the South Wales Borderers, was charged with shooting at Samuel Stevenson with a rifle at Bareilly on March 4th. The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to five years' penal servitude. The sentence has been confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief.

A GERMAN service paper states that military circles in Vienna are much occupied with a field telephone recently invented, which has given much satisfaction under the most exhaustive trials in the field, while, as in the case of the field telegraph, the apparatus can be fitted to any wires of communication. Being furnished with a microphone, the acoustic apparatus, or ear-trumpet ordinarily used, can be dispensed with, and voices can be recognised and identified at considerable distances.

THE Government of India have ruled that there is no objection to an Adjutant of Volunteers, who is an officer of the regular Army, being appointed to officiate in a staff appointment in addition to his own duties, in special and exceptional cases, with the consent of his Commanding Officer, when no other qualified officer is available. The privilege is one which should only be made use of on extraordinary occasions when no other arrangements are possible, as the nature of the duties of a Volunteer Adjutant, which necessitate constant moving about, are such as to preclude the performance of extraneous duties at one fixed place without detriment to his more legitimate work.

AN allowance of rupees five per mensem has been granted to each British non-commissioned officer or soldier who passes the Roorkee College course in surveying and reconnaissance, on condition that he obtains a certificate annually from the District Staff Officer of the command of his proficiency in the subject.

AN officer of the British Service holding the appointment of Adjutant of a Volunteer Corps after the departure of his regiment from India will continue to draw the regimental pay and allowances of his rank in addition to the Staff pay of the appointment.

THERE is no foundation, says the Englishman, for the statement that the issue of the Sikkim and Hazara medals has been delayed by the Mint. These medals and their fittings have been struck, and the complete medals and clasps have been supplied at the rate of about 3,500 per month—that is, rather more expeditiously than was promised to the Military Department. Not only has the whole amount requisitioned for by the Military Department been supplied, but an extra thousand additional has been despatched to the Military Department, as requested. Any delay in the issue of the medals must have occurred elsewhere.

SIR F. ROBERTS has, the Civil and Military Gazette hears, written to say that he considers the proposed Khalsa College for the Sikhs to be a most laudable object, and that if the scheme reaches finality he will be glad to become a patron. His Excellency also promises that when a sufficiently large sum has been collected to place the success of the undertaking beyond doubt he will make a donation to the funds. This express approval of the Commander-in-Chief conveyed to the Khalsa College Committee at Lahore should greatly strengthen their hands, as well as those of the important Amritsar sub-committee and other local committees in obtaining subscriptions from the Sikh regiments in their several districts, through the commanding officers.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

As the provisions of Army Regulations, India, Part I, do not appear to be clearly understood, and as much unnecessary correspondence with Army Head-Quarters is caused by applications for non-regulations passages in troopships being forwarded from the various commands, it is notified that only such applications may be forwarded as are at present authorised by the regulations above referred to. Government will not grant non-regulation passages to chaplains or to civilians. The rules regarding the families of officers are the same as for the officers themselves, but special passages are sanctioned from time to time for families of officers on field service, or to those referred to in clause (c), paragraph 220, Army Regulations, India, Part I. Should, however, any case specially deserving of consideration come under notice it should be forwarded with the recommendation of the General Officer commanding. The actual allotment of these non-regulation passages by the embarking officer is made according to juniority.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.(The only Quarterly Review in India.)*

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHLORODYNE, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.
